FOREWORD

As a public service, policing must wherever possible be transparent and accountable. Although this was true prior to the introduction of the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), the ramifications of this legislation have begun to create a world in which proactive publication by public bodies is the norm. Not only does this add value to our policies and procedures, it also enhances the trust of our communities as they can see with clarity how we have performed our duty. Of course, this approach to proactive publication does not prevent requests for information from rising: since the publication of the last Manual of Guidance (MOG), we have seen a 20% growth in the annual level of applications. The Service receives more Freedom of Information (FOI) requests than any other public body and law enforcement remains a matter of significant public interest. When this is added to the desire of the Service to place as much information as possible in the public environment so that local communities can influence policing priorities, then the overall challenge for managing our information becomes even more complex. The recent decision by Government to include the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) within the legislation is further evidence of the desire to promote public accountability at all levels within the Service.

However, there remains the reality that not all policing information is for public consumption. We need to make balanced judgments in accordance with the principals of the Act so as to justify why some information remains unpublished. It is a matter of significant concern for many in the Police Service that certain areas of our critical business (such as those concerning police informants, the management of sex offenders in the community, victims of crime and security operations involving the Royal Family and visiting Heads of State) continue to be subject of numerous FOI applications. The 'right to know' is not a 'right to know everything'. We maintain the view, for example, that in order to continue to attract police informants and to protect their safety, it is essential that their identity and the amount that they are paid remains confidential. Interestingly, other countries who have implemented Freedom of Information specifically excluded such data becoming publicly available within their legislation.

I have become more convinced about the value of retaining an ACPO Central Referral Unit (CRU) in order to promote corporate compliance with national FOIA issues whenever possible. This process has been invaluable when attempting to address key business issues. Working with the ACPO lead for specific business areas, the CRU has continued to deliver corporate advice assisting forces to release information in the knowledge that other forces will follow the same principals. I do not regard this as an attempt to thwart the individual decision-making of Chief Officers, merely to assist them in coming to a conclusion which remains theirs alone to make.

In addition, between June 2008 and June 2009, the CRU has continued to deliver essential training to over 240 members of staff from police forces and other partner agencies across the country. This has ensured that staff continue to develop skills and understand the intricacies of making a judgement with regard to the retention or release of information. Hopefully, these training programmes have helped to 'de-mystify' the legislation and especially to encourage our staff to contact applicants in order to find out exactly what they require and if appropriate, to release it. At its best, FOI requires close liaison with applicants and first class communication skills which promotes under most circumstances compliant responses.

We work very constructively with the Information Commissioner (IC) and his staff and continue to be grateful for the advice that has been offered in the compilation of this manual. Of course, we do not always agree but professional debate can often lead to a better outcome for both organisations and more importantly, for the public.

Finally, can I take the opportunity of wishing you well in your work involving Freedom of Information. Policing in a liberal democracy is a huge challenge but one which ensures that the informed consent of our communities continues to support our policing endeavours.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION ACT 2000

THE BASICS	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The Act gives any individual anywhere in the world the right to information held by the Police Service, subject to the application of exemptions. • The Act gives two related qualified rights - the right to be told whether the information is held and the right to receive the information. • The right of access applies regardless of the purpose of the application.
RESPONSIBILITIES ON PUBLIC AUTHORITIES	The Freedom of Information Act confers two responsibilities on public sector bodies: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The duty to confirm or deny whether the information requested exists; and • The duty to communicate the information. The two main instruments through which the release of information is achieved are: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Creating and maintaining a publication scheme The purpose of this is to make available a significant proportion of disclosable information routinely available and accessible without waiting for it to be requested. • Providing a general right of access to all types of 'recorded' information held by public authorities Under the terms of the Act, public authorities are required to make available requested information (subject to a range of exemptions) to any individual or organisation anywhere in the world.
VALIDITY	To be valid under the Freedom of Information Act, requests: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Must be made in writing; • Must clearly describe the information being sought; • Can be made from anywhere in the world; • Can be made by an individual or an organisation; • Can be made by letter, fax or email; • Must be legible; and • Must contain the name of the applicant and a return address. To be valid under the Freedom of Information Act, requests do not: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Have to be written on a special form; • Need to mention the Act; or • Need to refer to 'Freedom of Information' in any way.

WHAT IS COVERED?	The Freedom of Information Act: <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Covers records capable of recovery in any form.• Covers information not data or documents.• Covers information in any format, no matter how it is recorded.• Is fully retrospective: as long as the public authority has the information, it must be considered to fall within the scope of the request. All information, no matter how recorded, is subject to the FOIA. This includes written records, typed, handwritten, scribbled notes, e-mails, flip-charts, videos, audio tapes, computer tapes, logs, answer phone messages, tapes of telephone conversations and archived records.

The FOIA gives a general right of access to information to the public. However, the Act makes provision for withholding of information and offers 23 exemptions that may be applied to decline disclosure. For the Police Service, some exemptions are more relevant and applicable than others.

Applying exemptions under the FOIA can be complicated. Detailed guidance is provided in this manual.

USING THE ACPO NATIONAL FOI MANUAL OF GUIDANCE

Welcome to the latest version of the ACPO National Manual of Guidance for the Freedom of Information Act.

PLEASE DESTROY ALL PREVIOUS VERSIONS OF THE MANUAL AND WORK FROM THIS VERSION ONLY

MANUAL OBJECTIVES	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • To ensure consistency of approach in applying FOI principles, making FOI decisions and enforcing FOI exemptions; • To act as a user’s guide; • To provide a comprehensive resource for FOI Officers; • To ensure consistency in publishing information into the public domain via force publication schemes and in response to FOI enquiries; and • To define those requests that must be referred centrally due to their possible impact on the Police Service as a whole.

BEFORE CONTACTING THE ACPO CENTRAL REFERRAL UNIT PLEASE REFER TO THE MANUAL!

MANUAL STRUCTURE
Legislation	Under this heading, the specific section of the Act is presented, together with any other relevant information.
Guidance	ACPO interpretation of the Act and ACPO policy are covered under this heading. Falling under this heading is detailed guidance on good practice in relation to each of the key processes.

INTRODUCTION

THIS IS THE LATEST VERSION OF THE FOI MANUAL.

PLEASE DISREGARD ALL OTHER VERSIONS AND REFER ONLY TO THIS ONE.

The ACPO FOI Manual of Guidance provides the corporate template for processing and managing FOI across the 44 Home Office forces of England, Wales and Northern Ireland, each of which stands alone as an independent public authority. By following one single reference document, national corporacy can be encouraged, ensuring that the Act is interpreted in the same way by each force, safeguarding consistency and equality in the decision-making process.

The manual contains detailed guidance and advice on dealing with requests for information and managing complaints. It provides interpretation of FOI exemptions and it discusses the categories of information that the Police Service views as significant and in need of protection.

Looking beyond the FOI request process itself, the manual explains how forces should look to release information proactively through local publication schemes.

The Manual of Guidance has been ratified by ACPO and therefore provides the template that forces must follow in order to maintain a consistent and coherent approach to the application of the legislation across the Police Service.

ACPO STATEMENT OF POLICY

ACPO is committed to the fair treatment of people regardless of their age, colour, culture, disability, ethnic or national origins, gender, race, religious beliefs or sexual orientation.

The content of this manual has been created to ensure that every individual or group is treated equitably and consistently.

When applying the guidance within this manual, practitioners must consider the legislative requirements that must guide decision-making to avoid discriminating against any group or individual.

POLICE SERVICE REFERRAL CRITERIA

INTRODUCTION

There are certain risks associated with the disclosure of the types of information held by the Police Service. These risks range in severity from the minor upset of a partner agency to the death of an individual and/or damage to the national infrastructure.

These outcomes can be caused by a wide range of scenarios from criminal, concerted campaign or media use of the legislation to poorly thought out release or withholding of information. Actually refusing to provide information, even if appropriate, can sometimes be more damaging than releasing it, due to the adverse publicity and complaints it may attract.

In order to combat these issues, and reduce the risks, a Central Referral Unit has been created and ratified by all Chief Constables in the UK. The CRU's remit is to:

- Provide advice, good practice and consistency in response with regard to FOIA requests that meet the referral criteria.
- Co-ordinate strategic development of FOIA throughout the Police Service.
- Maintain and develop relationships with partners, other agencies, regulatory bodies and requestors at a national level.
- Deliver FOIA training and promulgate good practice appropriate to the needs of the service.
- Proactively monitor potential criminal and misuse of the legislation in order to protect the service.
- Analyse intelligence.

Ensuring delivery of this remit is the responsibility of the respective ACPO and Association of Chief Police Officers of Scotland (ACPOS) portfolio holders. The CRU will centrally co-ordinate combined activity and its location will be determined by the ACPO portfolio holder.

THE PROCESS

Forces should analyse all FOIA requests they receive using the referral criteria in this manual. Please note v4 of the Referral Criteria contained within this manual has been considerably altered since v3.

A request being referred must be accompanied by the CRU template (please see next page). Please note that this template must be completed in its entirety for consideration by the CRU and incomplete templates will be returned. If information is not available to complete a particular box on the template, please indicate this.

In the first instance issues requiring advice or requests for referral should be sent by e-mail to acpo.advice@foi.pnn.police.uk.

CENTRAL REFERRAL UNIT REFERRAL CRITERIA V4

- All requests as specified below should be sent to the CRU.
- A fully completed referral form must accompany each request.
- The criteria is broken down by 'risk', which indicates the severity of harm that the public and/or the Police Service could suffer at a national level if the request is not subjected to appropriate consideration. 'Low Risk' is an indicator that detriment may still occur, but only at a local level.
- Accordingly, any individual and/or force deciding not to comply with the criteria may have to account for any adverse effect caused without the support of national business leads and/or senior partner agencies.

Risk	Subjects
High	Firearms (police or criminal), CBRN and explosives* National Systems (eg. ANPR, PNC, PND, NDNAD etc)* Information originating from ACPO/S (eg. Manuals of Guidance)* RSO or MAPPA* Ongoing high profile/national investigations or operations* ----- Witness Protection  Information originating from or relating to the Security Services/SOCA/ SCDEA VIP/Royalty Protection  CHIS/Informants  Terrorism or domestic extremism  Surveillance/RIPA
Medium	Information sent to or from a national body (eg. Home Office)* Completed high profile/national investigations or operations (eg. Pentameter 1, G8)*
Low	Unpublished statistics, resource or finance information not subject to Home Office/Scottish Executive returns Any request being made vexatious (indicate whether advice is needed or if submission is for recording purposes only)
*	Unless already published or disclosed within last 12 months
	Must always be referred regardless of previous disclosures or advice

In addition to the above the following should also be referred:

- Requests for an internal review of a previously CRU referred request.
- An appeal with the Information Commissioners Office (ICO) or Tribunal case, regardless of whether it has been referred before.

Forces may also refer any other request which they require assistance in responding to or are have concerns about provided they specify exactly what service is required from the CRU.

ONCE REFERRED, IF NO ADVICE HAS BEEN RECEIVED, PLEASE DO NOT SEND A RESPONSE TO THE APPLICANT WITHOUT DISCUSSING THE MATTER WITH THE RELEVANT CRU CASEWORKER.

ACPO FREEDOM OF INFORMATION REFERRAL TEMPLATE V2

- When submitting a request to the Central Referral Unit, all fields on this form must be completed as fully as possible.

DEFINING A REQUEST

GENERAL INFORMATION

Under the FOIA any information, documentation or records that are produced internally or held by a public authority, or held by contractors or third parties on behalf of the public authority, are covered by the Act.

All information held by staff associations, such as the Police Federation, Unison, National Black Police Association, Gay and Lesbian Association etc, will not be covered by the Act even though the information may be held on police servers or premises, as long as the information is only for the sole use of those associations or unions.

However, if the information is used or accessed by the police force to execute its functions as an organisation, then it would be deemed as being held by the Police Service and would, therefore, need to be considered for disclosure under the FOIA. This also applies to information provided to forces by suppliers and contractors and to information held by them on forces' behalf.

FOI AND ENVIRONMENTAL INFORMATION REGULATIONS (EIR)

There are many similarities between the two regimes and any request for 'environmental information' must be answered in accordance with the EIRs rather than the FOIA. It is possible that in some cases both regimes will be relevant. In these cases, it is essential to be clear which parts of the information fall under which regime so as to apply the correct exemption or exception if information has to be withheld.

Requests for information under the EIRs do not need to be made in writing but can include telephone requests on environmental matters (although in practice it is advisable to make a written record of any verbal requests received).

Under FOI there is a requirement to provide a substantive response to any request for information promptly and in any event within 20 working days. There is some scope to extend this timescale when a qualified exemption is being considered and it is necessary to assess the balance of public interest. The EIRs also require requests to be answered within 20 working days but there is provision to extend the response time to 40 working days, but only for complex and voluminous requests.

LEGISLATION - SECTION 8

- (1) In this Act any reference to a 'request for information' is a reference to such a request which-
 - (a) is in writing,
 - (b) states the name of the applicant and an address for correspondence, and
 - (c) describes the information requested.

- (2) For the purposes of subsection (1)(a), a request is to be treated as made in writing where the text of the request -
 - (a) is transmitted by electronic means,
 - (b) is received in legible form, and
 - (c) is capable of being used for subsequent reference.

Clearly, most written requests for information received by a force are likely to be FOIA requests and by law must be treated as such. This includes requests made via social networking sites providing they fulfil the s8 criteria.

Where a request is received and the applicant is either anonymous or suspected to be using a pseudonym, there is no lawful requirement to deal with this under FOIA because the criterion defined under s8 is not met. However, if there is no harm in disclosing the requested information and there is negligible cost, forces are encouraged to provide the information.

The key is to engage the applicant whenever the opportunity arises. This leads to greater clarity, and in some cases can actually save time!

BUSINESS AS USUAL

To overcome the bureaucratic issues associated with many thousands of pieces of correspondence being processed under FOIA, there is an established option called 'Business as Usual' (BAU).

This term has been created to cover certain types of requests which can fall outside of the legislation. It is an informal agreement and has no legal basis whatsoever.

Extreme care needs to be taken when taking a request outside of the legislation, as an abuse of BAU could invite an Enforcement Notice from the Information Commissioner's Officer (ICO) or, much more seriously, the withdrawal of the BAU as an option for all public authorities.

To be treated as BAU, a request for information must fit the 'Key Criteria' in that:

- It must not indicate that it is an FOIA request.*
- The information will be provided.
- The information will be provided within 20 working days.

 Decision Notices have indicated that requests that are merely addressed to the 'FOI Department' or the 'FOI Mailbox' would be an indication of the intent of the applicant. If in doubt, clarify with the applicant.*

It is common to receive written requests for information from partner agencies, and other law enforcement bodies, such as the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS), Local Authorities, Independent Police Complaints Commission (IPCC), Home Office, Serious Organised Crime Agency (SOCA) and other forces.

The provision of information to these bodies is an established, key business process, which should not attract the usual FOIA procedure, and should whenever possible be processed as BAU. **

However, such requests can only be processed as BAU when the key criteria are met. If the request falls outside of the key criteria, there is still an option to capture it within BAU, provided written confirmation that the requestor does not require it to be processed under FOIA is sought. In the case of any doubt, a formal withdrawal obtained from the applicant will provide an audit trail, protecting the receiving authority.

 Care should be taken that just because the requestor is a member of such an organisation, that they are not exercising their private rights under FOIA. If in doubt, ask!*

It is common for numerous requests for information to come into force media departments. In the vast majority of cases this will take the form of a telephone call, which in itself is not a valid FOIA request, and should be dealt with appropriately.

However, care needs to be taken with written requests, which are highly likely to conform with s8 of the Act and will therefore meet all the legal criteria that define an FOIA request. In order for these to be processed as BAU, it must fit the 'key criteria' outlined in this manual.

If in any doubt, enquiries must be made with the applicant as to their intentions and if necessary, written confirmation obtained. Written confirmation must be received from the applicant prior to any request being withdrawn under FOI and processed through Business as Usual channels.

It is recognised that some information is normally provided for a fee, such as road traffic collision reports. A request for the provision of such data can be dealt with informally if the 'key criteria' are met. Otherwise, the request will need to be processed under the legislation and should attract the s21 exemption, Information reasonably accessible by other means. See also the chapter on the publication scheme.

Practitioners should split up questions before processing/proceeding.

Each subject area contained within a request is counted as a separate request. This is particularly relevant when considering the Fees Regulations (see relevant section in this manual) and the requirements for partial NCNDs where parts of a request fall under the Data Protection Act.

A basic example of this is if a request were received asking for general information about police vehicles and bonus payments to the Chief Constable, this must be divided into two individual requests.

A more complex illustration would be one of the types of requests commonly received by Safer Roads Partnerships (SRPs) where a recipient of a Notice of Intended Prosecution (NIP) makes a request for information personal to themselves (and their case) combined with training details of officers, calibration certificates of cameras and statistical information on the site.

In this example, there may be a requirement to provide an NCND response to the element of the request relating to the individual's personal details and the existence of information relating to the offence itself, coupled with the requirement to provide other more generic information- such as officer training details and calibration certificates - under FOI. In order to facilitate this multiple response, practitioners are advised to break the request down into its component parts and respond accordingly.

FEES REGULATIONS

LEGISLATION - SECTION 9

- (1) A public authority to whom a request for information is made may, within the period for complying with section 1(1), give the applicant a notice in writing (in this Act referred to as a 'fees notice') stating that a fee of an amount specified in the notice is to be charged by the authority for complying with section 1(1).
- (2) Where a fees notice has been given to the applicant, the public authority is not obliged to comply with section 1(1) unless the fee is paid within the period of three months beginning with the day on which the fees notice is given to the applicant.
- (3) Subject to subsection (5), any fee under this section must be determined by the public authority in accordance with regulations made by the Secretary of State.
- (4) Regulations under subsection (3) may, in particular, provide -
 - (a) that no fee is payable in prescribed cases,
 - (b) that any fee is not to exceed such maximum as may be specified in, or determined in accordance with, the regulations, and
 - (c) that any fee is to be calculated in such manner as may be prescribed by the regulations.
- (5) Subsection (3) does not apply where provision is made by or under any enactment as to the fee that may be charged by the public authority for the disclosure of the information.

LEGISLATION - SECTION 12

- (1) Section 1(1) does not oblige a public authority to comply with a request for information if the authority estimates that the cost of complying with the request would exceed the appropriate limit.
- (2) Subsection (1) does not exempt the public authority from its obligation to comply with paragraph (a) of section 1(1) unless the estimated cost of complying with that paragraph alone would exceed the appropriate limit.
- (3) In subsections (1) and (2) 'the appropriate limit' means such amount as may be prescribed, and different amounts may be prescribed in relation to different cases.
- (4) The Secretary of State may by regulation provide that, in such circumstances as may be prescribed, where two or more requests for information are made to a public authority -
 - (a) by one person, or
 - (b) by different persons who appear to the public authority to be acting in concert or in pursuance of a campaign,

The estimated cost of complying with any of the requests is to be taken to be the estimated total cost of complying with them all.

- (5) The Secretary of State may by regulation make provision for the purposes of this section as to the costs to be estimated and as to the manner in which they are to be estimated.

LEGISLATION - SECTION 13

- (1) A public authority may charge for the communication of any information whose communication-
- (a) is not required by section 1(1) because the cost of complying with the request for information exceeds the amount which is the appropriate limit for the purposes of section 12 (1) and (2), and
 - (b) is not otherwise required by law, such fee as may be determined by the public authority in accordance with regulations by the Secretary of State.
- (2) Regulations under this section may, in particular, provide -
- (a) that any fee is not to exceed such maximum as may be specified in, or determined in accordance with, the regulations, and
 - (b) that any fee is to be calculated in such manner as may be prescribed by the regulations.
- (3) Subsection (1) does not apply where provision is made by or under any enactment as to the fee that may be charged by the public authority for the disclosure of information.

GUIDANCE

FEES REGULATIONS

S12 of the FOIA provides an exemption from a public authority's obligation to comply with a request for information where the cost of compliance is estimated to exceed the appropriate limit. The appropriate limit is the key concept concerning fees.

The Fees Regulations state that this cost limit is £450 in the case of the Police Service.

A public authority must still confirm or deny whether it holds the information requested unless the cost of this alone would exceed the appropriate limit.

THE APPROPRIATE LIMIT

There are two distinct areas in relation to fees contained within the legislation.

The first area is relevant to the initial processing of a request when an authority, when estimating the time taken, can take into account the following four items:

- Determining if the information is held;
- Locating the information;
- Retrieving the information; and
- Extracting the information to be disclosed from the other information*.

*The time spent identifying information to be exempted and the time dedicated to the process of redaction cannot be included in the fees estimate.

Example

A request is received for any external feedback on the force's new IT project.

The information is contained somewhere within a mixture of electronic files and hard copy letters and correspondence contained within 10 crates. The total number of documents is in excess of 10,000 and to read through each of those documents to determine those relevant to the request is likely to exceed the 18 hours.

A similar request is received for all information held relating to the force's new IT project. The same information is identified as being relevant to the request. There is now no requirement to filter out irrelevant documents as all the information is captured by the request. The fact that these documents now need to be read in order for a disclosure decision to be made is not something that can be included within the fees estimate.

CALCULATING COSTS

An authority can take into account the costs attributable to the time that persons (both the authority's staff and external contractors) are expected to spend on these activities. Such costs are calculated at £25 per hour per person for all authorities regardless of the actual cost or rate of pay, which means that the limit will be exceeded if these activities exceed 24 hours for central government, legislative bodies and the armed forces, and 18 hours for all other authorities.

NB. The figures of £450 and £600 relate only to the appropriate limit; they do not relate to the fees that may be charged.

ESTIMATE

S12 makes it clear that a public authority does not have to make a precise calculation of the costs of complying with a request. Only an estimate is required.

However, the estimate must be reasonable.

Good practice when refusing a request on cost is to provide a breakdown of how those costs have been estimated. This is supported by the Information Tribunal's approach in the case of Gowers v London Borough of Camden & the ICO in which it was stated that a public authority should demonstrate how their estimate has been calculated.

Where a force refuses a request because the appropriate limit has been exceeded, it should advise and assist an applicant on options in refining their request in order to bring it under the cost threshold. Options may include:

- Providing an index or list of information where already available.
- Ascertaining whether the applicant would like a summary or digest of the information request.
- Ascertaining whether the applicant would like to view the information should the cost of providing the information in permanent form be too costly.
- Answering and charging up to the full amount (please consult with CRU prior to selecting this option).
- Declining to answer the request due to the likely cost of compliance being greater than the appropriate limit.
- Answering and waive the fee.

Forces are able to charge for disbursement or communication costs regardless of the amount of time required to process the request.

CHARGEABLE ITEMS

There are two types of fees that can be charged:

- A fee to cover the marginal costs of the request - the cost of finding, sorting, editing or redacting. Fees can only be charged in such situations when the marginal cost exceeds the appropriate limit, as defined in the fees regulations.
- A fee to cover the cost of disbursements, such as printing, photocopying or postage.

Marginal Costs

S13 states that a fee may be charged for requests that exceed the appropriate limit. The current regulatory limit has been set by the Secretary of State and currently stands at £600 for central government and £450 for other public authorities, including local authorities, the Police Service, the health service and education.

If it is estimated that the cost of responding to a request would be less than £450, the Police Service is unable to pass on the marginal charge for the request to the applicant.

Standard Hourly Rate

In order to provide a national standard for charging for access to information from UK police forces, it is recommended the standard hourly rate contained within the Fees Regulations should be adopted by forces.

This rate currently stands at £25 per hour which equates to 18 hours of work.

This charge will apply regardless of geographical location and who deals with the request.

Disbursements

Disbursements may include:

- Photocopying or printing material - At cost;
- Postage - At cost;
- Producing material in an alternative format, such as putting it onto CD-Rom, video, audio cassette or in Braille - At cost; and
- Translating information into a different language at the request of the applicant (not Welsh). If a public authority regularly works in the language requested and has an in-house translation service, it should consider waiving any translation costs.

Staff time associated with these activities cannot be included unless the request exceeds the fee limit and the force has taken the decision to charge for the total cost of the request.

There is no limit to the amount that a public authority may charge in disbursements.

If disbursement costs are not received within 60 working days (beginning on the day the fees notice is issued), the force is not obliged to comply with its duty to provide the information.

UPDATED ACPO POLICY

When processing voluminous requests, for which neither S12 (excess costs) nor S14 (vexatious) apply, forces should continue to engage with the applicant in order to negotiate a solution. If this fails and it is likely that exemptions are engaged, those should be applied to the entire request, evidenced in line with S17. In addition to this, evidence of the substantial administration burden compliance would cause should also be provided. The usual complaint processes will apply and the applicant can seek adjudication from the ICO. The CRU will then engage with the ICO, invite him to rule on the exemptions and to consider applying his discretion, under s58, in supporting non-disclosure on the basis of unreasonable effort if he is so minded.

Any force considering such action should refer the case to the CRU and it engage with the ICO at an early stage to get a steer on such cases. The fact that discretion will only be exercised in exceptional circumstances should always be borne in mind.

Ultimately, a negotiated settlement will still be the CRU's primary aim.

The CRU would define a 'voluminous' request not by the number of documents, but by the time it would take to ascertain whether the information requested is exempt. Arguably, a common sense baseline to begin with is 18 hours.

TIME FOR COMPLIANCE

LEGISLATION - SECTION 10

- (1) Subject to subsections (2) and (3), a public authority must comply with section (1) promptly and in any event not later than the twentieth working day following date of receipt.
- (2) Where the authority has given a fees notice to the applicant and the fee is paid in accordance with section 9(2), the working days in the period beginning with the day on which the fee is received by the authority are to be disregarded in calculating for the purposes of subsection (1) the twentieth working day following the date of receipt.
- (3) If, and to the extent that -
 - (a) section 1(1)(a) would not apply if the condition in section 2(1)(b) were satisfied, or
 - (b) section 1(1)(b) would not apply if the condition in section 2(2)(b) were satisfied, the public authority need not comply with section 1(1)(a) or (b) until such time as is reasonable in the circumstances; but this subsection does not affect the time by which the notice under section 17(1) must be given.
- (4) The Secretary of State may by regulations provide that subsections (1) and (2) are to have effect if any reference to the twentieth working day following the date of receipt were a reference to such other day, not later than the sixtieth working day following the date of receipt, as may be specified in, or determined in accordance with, the regulations.
- (5) Regulations under subsection (4) may-
 - (a) prescribe different days in relation to different cases, and
 - (b) confer a discretion on the Commissioner.
- (6) In this section -
 - (a) 'the date of receipt' means -
 - (b) the date on which the public authority receives the request for information, or if later, the day on which it receives the information referred to in section 1(3); 'working day' means any day other than a Saturday, a Sunday, Christmas Day, Good Friday or a day which is a bank holiday under the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971 in any part of the United Kingdom.

GUIDANCE

NOT COMPLYING WITH THE 20 WORKING DAY LIMIT

The time limit in which forces have to respond to requests is very clearly defined in the legislation and ICO guidance. Requests must be answered as soon as practicable, and in any case within 20 working days. It is important to remember that day '1' will be the day after receipt.

If on rare occasions forces believe that it may not be possible to meet the 20 working day deadline, they should contact the CRU as soon as possible for further advice.

There is a possibility that the deadline can be legally extended for public interest considerations (see relevant section of this manual) but only where a valid qualified exemption is engaged. This option should not be taken unless the force is honestly considering public interest issues.

There is no provision to support occasions where forces cannot comply because of issues such as poor records management, lack of resources or internal failings due to members of the force not participating effectively in the request process.

ICO guidance clearly articulates that consultation and research with stakeholders is not a valid reason for non-compliance in respect of exceeding the time limit on requests.

OTHER FACTORS WHICH MAY AFFECT THE DEADLINE

The 20 working days time limit becomes effective on the day of receipt or the date on which further information that has been reasonably required has been received. Where a fee is charged, the 20 day compliance time period will begin again upon clearance of the applicant's cheque.

If a request is received and there is an 'out of office' with an alternative address, the request has not been 'received' and the onus falls back on the applicant to re-direct. If an 'out of office' is on with no alternative, the request was received on the date it arrived in the original mailbox.

If s8 of the Act is not complied with (see relevant section of this manual), then the 'clock' will not have started as a legal request does not yet exist.

If clarification has been requested or the force is awaiting further details from the applicant, then the clock can be 'stopped'. It should re-start immediately upon receipt of the requested clarification or details.

Where clarification or a fee is required, the authority may close off the request after 60 working days if no further correspondence is received from the applicant

PIT EXTENSION

Where a qualified exemption is being applied, the public authority may 'stop the clock' and extend the deadline for consideration of public interest factors for a time which is reasonable in the circumstances. The FOIA does not define the word 'reasonable', but it is the ICO view that it is not acceptable for a public authority to take, as a matter of course, several weeks to assess the public interest considerations.

In cases where the public interest considerations are exceptionally complex, it may be reasonable to take longer but, in no case should the total time exceed 40 working days.

It is imperative that the applicant is kept regularly informed of progress and where the initial 20 working days is going to be exceeded, forces must still serve a 'refusal notice' under s17 of FOIA within 20 working days of a request even in those cases where it is relying on a qualified exemption and has not yet completed the public interest test. That notice must state the exemption(s) being relied on and, if not apparent, why. The notice must include an estimate of the time by which this decision will be made. If the final decision is to withhold the information requested, a second notice must then be issued providing the reasons for the decision on the public interest. No further notice is required if the final decision is to disclose the information.

In some situations, a qualified exemption may apply to the duty to confirm or deny and, due to the need to consider the balance of the public interest, it may not be appropriate to confirm or deny whether the information is held within the 20 working day deadline. If time for complying needs to be extended in relation to the duty to confirm or deny, the letter to the applicant must be very carefully drafted to ensure that no indication is given as to whether or not the information requested is held.

Also remember that if no exemptions apply to some of the information requested, it should be provided within the 20 days as usual. The time deadline for the provision of this information cannot be extended. It would be good practice to provide this information together with the extension notice.

It is recommended that a PIT extension response should include:

'The FOI Act obliges us to respond to requests promptly and in any case no later than 20 working days after receiving your request. We must consider firstly whether we can comply with s1(1)(a) of the Act, which is our duty to confirm whether or not the information requested is held and secondly we must comply with s1(1)(b), which is the provision of such information. However, when a qualified exemption applies either to the confirmation or denial or the information provision and the public interest test is engaged, the Act allows the time for response to be longer than 20 working days, if the balance of such public interest is undetermined.

In this case we have not yet reached a decision on where the balance of the public interest lies in respect of either of the above obligations. We estimate that it will take an additional [xx] days to take a decision on where this balance lies. Therefore, we plan to let you have a response by [date]. If it appears that it will take longer than this to reach a conclusion, you will be kept informed.

The specific exemption(s) which apply in relation to your request is/are: [include both qualified and absolute indicating which is which and include a brief explanation of why it/they apply unless it is not apparent or unless you are not required to do so by virtue of s17(4)].

Insert usual complaint information.

VEXATIOUS REQUESTS

LEGISLATION - SECTION 14

- (1) Section 1(1) does not oblige a public authority to comply with a request for information if the request is vexatious.
- (2) Where a public authority has previously complied with a request for information which was made by any person, it is not obliged to comply with a subsequent identical or substantially similar request from that person unless a reasonable interval has elapsed between compliance with the previous request and the making of the current request.

THIS IS A MANDATORY REFERRAL

GUIDANCE

OVERVIEW

Under s14(1), forces do not have to comply with vexatious requests. There is no public interest test and no requirement to provide any information or confirm or deny whether the information is held. However, in most cases a refusal notice will still need to be issued.

This section is designed to protect forces from requestors who seek to abuse their rights under the Act, in an attempt to deliberately disrupt or impact on public functions.

The application of s14 requires the gathering of evidence and like all decisions made under FOI can later be subject to external scrutiny. It is therefore imperative that its application is proportionate and relevant to the prevailing circumstances and a full record is kept.

The term 'vexatious' is not defined in the Act but most ordinary dictionaries list it as 'causing irritation or annoyance'. This does not mean, however, that an applicant simply annoying an FOI Officer is vexatious!

Deciding whether a request is vexatious is a flexible balancing exercise, taking into account all of the circumstances of the case.

It is important to note that it is the request- not the requester - that is made vexatious. A public authority cannot make a request vexatious just because the individual concerned has caused problems in the past. Nonetheless, the past behaviour of the requester will be relevant if the request perpetuates that individual's behaviour.

IDENTIFYING AND DEALING WITH A VEXATIOUS REQUEST

To identify a vexatious request, the following questions should be considered, taking into account the history and context of the request.

Would complying with the request impose a significant burden?

This requires consideration of more than just the cost of compliance. Would responding divert or distract staff from their usual work? This factor alone is not likely to be strong enough.

Is it fair to regard the request as obsessive?

Relevant factors would be the volume and frequency of requests. Requests for information the applicant has already seen, or a clear intention to use the request to reopen issues that have already been debated and considered, such as complaints.

Is the request harassing the authority or causing distress to staff?

The focus should be on the effect of the request, not on the requester's intention. A 'reasonable person' must regard the request as harassing or distressing. Relevant factors could include volume and frequency of correspondence, hostile, abusive or offensive language or mingling requests with accusations and complaints.

Is it designed to cause disruption or annoyance?

This can be difficult to prove but evidence from interaction from the applicant should be preserved. If they are a member of a campaign group and their intentions are in the public domain then this could well be relevant, for example.

Does it lack any serious purpose or value?

On its own this factor is unlikely to be sufficient. FOIA is generally not concerned with the motives of an applicant. If the requester will not provide a reason for wanting the information then it does not mean that there cannot be one. However, there will always be mileage in engaging with the applicant to see if they can assist in understanding, as a request which certainly does have a serious purpose or value is unlikely to ever be made vexatious.

To progress along the vexatious route, an FOI Officer should be able to produce evidence under more than one of the listed headings.

The wider history and context of the request is also important:

- Is this the latest in a long line of requests?
- Does it form an overall pattern of behaviour?

REPEATED REQUESTS

There is also a separate provision under s14(2) when a request can be refused if it is repeated. To engage this section, the following must be established:

- It was made by the same person as a previous request.
- It is identical or substantially similar to the previous request; and
- A reasonable interval has not elapsed since the previous request.

Requests cannot be refused under this section if they are submitted by different persons, unless there is a belief that they are part of a campaign designed to cause disruption or annoyance, in which case s14(1) may apply. It may be simpler to aggregate them for the purposes of cost under s12, if there is a belief that requesters are acting together and compliance would exceed the cost limit.

The 'reasonable interval' is not defined but it is suggested that 60 working days may be a useful benchmark. However this is subject to the prevailing, depending circumstances such as the information changing on a regular basis, or a newer version becoming available shortly after the request was dealt with.

REFUSING THE REQUEST

When a vexatious or repeated or repeated request has been received, a refusal notice must be issued within 20 working days. The refusal notice should state that either s14(1) or s14(2) is engaged, together with an explanation as to why. Details must also be provided in respect of the force's internal review procedure and the right to appeal to the ICO.

However, s17(6) states a refusal notice need not be issued if the same applicant has already received a refusal notice for a previous vexatious or repeated request and it would be unreasonable to issue another one.

If the use of s14 is being contemplated, the CRU should be notified so that a database of evidence can be maintained which will be necessary should the request go to more than one force. Evidence of vexatiousness can be obtained from many external sources but the decision to make a request so will still lie with each individual receiving force.

The ICO Charter may be of assistance when determining whether an applicant may be made vexatious under s14 of the Act. This document is located with other information on their website at:

ACKNOWLEDGING A REQUEST & PROVIDING ASSISTANCE

LEGISLATION - SECTION 16

- (1) It shall be the duty of a public authority to provide advice and assistance, so far as it would be reasonable to expect the authority to do so, to persons who propose to make, or have made, requests for information to it.

GUIDANCE

- The Police Service has a duty to provide advice and assistance to applicants making FOI requests.
- Whilst there is no requirement to acknowledge a request under the Act, the Police Service will acknowledge all requests received. The acknowledgement should include the date the request was received and contact details for the FOI Team.
- Where necessary, the applicant should be contacted to clarify the request.
- Procedures for dealing with FOI requests should be published under the force publication scheme.
- Under the FOIA, all members of staff within an organisation are obliged to provide assistance to any person requesting information.
- Where an applicant is unable to make a request in writing (for instance due to illiteracy, disability or illness), a note of the request can be made on behalf of the applicant and sent to them for confirmation.
- If advice and assistance has been provided and the force is still unable to identify and locate the requested information, the force is not expected to seek further clarification.
- Where further clarification has been sought and the applicant has not responded, the force may close off the request after 60 working days if no further clarification is received.

It is good practice and highly recommended that the applicant is contacted, verbally if possible, to try and assist in identifying the exact information required from the authority. In the case of media organisations, it is recommended that this contact is purely about the request and where the media organisation is asking specific questions about the police force, they should be directed to the Media Services Department.

TRANSFER OF REQUESTS

LEGISLATION - SECTION 16

This area of the Act is governed by Code of Practice 45.

GUIDANCE

Requests may be completely transferred where the force holds none of the information requested, or partially transferred where the force holds some of the information requested.

WHERE NO INFORMATION HELD

- The applicant must be informed as soon as possible that no information is held.
- If the force is aware of where the information may be held, the request should be transferred with the applicant's consent.
- If the force reasonably concludes that the applicant is not likely to object, the force may transfer the request without referring to the applicant. The applicant should be informed that the request has been transferred.
- As an alternative, the force may suggest that the applicant re-applies to the authority it believes holds the information. The force should provide the applicant with contact details for the relevant authority.
- A request should not be transferred without first confirming with the second force or public authority that the information is held.

WHERE INFORMATION PARTIALLY HELD

- The applicant must be informed as soon as possible that only part of the information is held.
- Where the information is partially held elsewhere and the force can identify the authority or other force that holds the information, the force may then transfer the remainder of the request to another force or public authority.
- If the force reasonably concludes that the applicant is not likely to object, the force may transfer the request without going back to the applicant but should still inform the applicant that the request has been transferred.
- The request should not be transferred without first confirming with the second force or public authority that the information is held.
- If a force believes an applicant is likely to object, it should only transfer the request with consent. If there is any doubt, the police force may prefer to contact the applicant and suggest that they make a new request to the second authority.
- Alternatively, the force may suggest that the applicant re-applies to the authority that the police force believes holds the information. The force should provide the applicant with contact details for the relevant authority.

THE RECEIVING AUTHORITY'S OBLIGATIONS

- The receiving authority must comply with its obligations as if it had received the request direct from the applicant.
- The time for complying with such a request commences from the day that the receiving authority receives the request.

CONSULTATION WITH THIRD PARTIES

Forces should be aware of and adhere to s45 which covers the provision of advice and assistance, the transfer of requests between public authorities and the consultative process.

When a third party may be affected by disclosure, the Police Service will consult with that third party prior to disclosure, unless consultation is impracticable (for example, because the third party cannot be located or because the cost of consultation is disproportionate). In this case, the Police Service should consider what is the most reasonable course of action under the requirements of the Act and the individual circumstances of the request.

Where the interests of more than one third party are affected and they have a representative organisation, consultation with the representative organisation, or a representative sample of third parties if there is no representative organisation, is sufficient.

If a third party does not respond to consultation, the force has a duty to disclose information under the Act within the time limits.

In all cases, it is the receiving force/authority that determines whether information should be disclosed. A refusal to consent to disclosure by a third party does not, in itself, mean that information should be withheld.

THE DECISION-MAKING PROCESS

GUIDANCE

In order to process a request for information effectively, ACPO has devised a 'good practice' model. To fully understand the model and its application, practitioners are strongly advised to attend the ACPO decision-maker/reviewers' training courses.

This process works equally well for the initial decision and any subsequent internal review.

MODEL REQUEST PROCESS

Pre-Decision Making

Dealing with requests can be a time-consuming and expensive activity for forces, but it is a statutory requirement. The number of requests received by forces tends to be proportionate to their size, but with similar resources some seem to struggle more than others to meet legislative deadlines. The one common factor seen in those forces that seem to manage the workload more efficiently is their ability to engage with applicants.

It is strongly suggested that when any request is received which is complicated and potentially difficult to answer, the applicant should be contacted. The primary function of this interaction is to establish exactly what the applicant wants and to encourage a mutual exploration of other options which make it easier for them identify and obtain the information required.

This activity is fully in-keeping with the Codes of Practice and the duty to assist under s16 of the Act but forces should note that apart from clarification of the request, there is no legal requirement for the applicant to provide any further information.

It is also recommended that before investing time in making a decision on disclosure the following are all completed in the order that they occur:

- Is the request vexatious or repeated? (See s14 Guidance)
- Is the request valid? (See 'Defining a Request')
- Has the applicant been contacted to establish exactly what they want?
- Confirm this cannot be provided under normal business processes (see Business as Usual).
- Is it already in the public domain? (See s21 and chapter on Publication Scheme)
- How much will it cost and is the information actually held? (See s12 Guidance)
- Should the CRU be notified? (See Police Service Referral Criteria)

Once these points have been successfully resolved, deciding on a suitable response can begin in earnest.

How to Make a Decision on Disclosure

Overview

FOIA is the statutory requirement for forces to confirm to the public that they hold information (s1(1)(a)), and if they do, to communicate that information to the world (s1(1)(b)). There will be occasions when to do either of these things will be in contravention of legislation. However, to deny the public of their 'right to know' is not a decision that can be taken lightly as there are ramifications for individuals and organisations that intentionally do so in contravention of the Act.

The following process has evolved which enables these decisions to be made effectively and professionally, taking into account a wide range of factors. Forces must have in place robust policies and procedures on information disclosure, ensuring that those responsible for making decisions have the appropriate skills, are vetted to be able to view the information and are fully supported by senior management.

Identifying Harm

The main reason for not complying with s1(1) of the Act is that some kind of prejudice would occur. This is labelled by the Police Service as 'harm' and although no such definition exists within the Act, this is the beginning of the process that will determine whether an exemption could apply. It is the responsibility of the decision-maker in the first instance to collect evidence of all the potential harm that might result from disclosure of the information, and subsequently to determine the likelihood of the harm occurring if it is not certain or probable.

There is no definition contained within the Act as to exactly what this harm may be, although the regular tribunal decisions assist us in our understanding. In the policing context harm is defined as:

- The undesired consequence of the disclosure of information which will or could lead to the physical or mental harm of a person, damage to property, loss of public confidence or a reduction in the effective provision of public service delivery.

Although harm need not be substantial, the ICO expects it to be more than trivial. It must be real and not perceived. The degree of harm is not specified, so strictly any level of harm or damage might be argued. However, forces should bear in mind that the less significant the harm is shown to be, the higher the likelihood that the public interest test will require disclosure.

The Information Tribunal has also considered the evidential burden in establishing the likelihood of prejudice. A force cannot be expected to prove exactly what would happen on disclosure. However, it is not sufficient to put forward unsupported speculation or opinion; you must be able to provide some evidence so that a conclusion can be drawn about what is likely.

Decision-makers are encouraged to ensure that the evidence they produce meets or exceeds the above standards. Actual examples are far more effective than anecdotal comparisons. Regardless of whether there is a legal requirement to communicate harm to the applicant (prejudice-based exemptions) once identified, it is good practice to ensure that any harm should be recorded as part of the decision-making process.

When collecting evidence of harm, in order of priority, the following should be considered:

- Individuals
- The community
- The force and wider Police Service
- Other bodies

The sequence of actions detailed in the following table should be followed as a template for the decision-making process:

Phase	Action	Next Phase
1	Ensure the pre-decision making tasks have been completed - for example, s14 considerations.	Go to phase 2.
2	Collect the information that has been requested.	Go to phase 3.
3	Establish: Is there any harm in confirming the information is or is not held?*	If yes, go to phase 5. If no go to phase 4.
4	Establish: Is there any harm in disclosing the information?*	If yes, go to phase 5. If no go to phase 8.
5	Identify which exemptions are engaged and then filter them according to type.	If you decide to rely only on absolute exemptions then go to phase 7. If a mix or only qualified exemptions apply then go to phase 6.
6	Conduct a public interest test for each of the exemptions* (see public interest test chapter).	If the PIT overcomes all of the exemptions in relation to phase 3 go back to phase 4. If the exemptions from phase 4 are overcome go to phase 8. If the balance in relation to either does not favour disclosure go to phase 7.
7	Ensure all of the information requested is actually exempt. If it is prepare a full refusal notice (see refusing a request). If not, consider redaction and prepare a partial refusal.	If full refusal end the process. If partial move the non exempt material only to phase 8.
8	Release the information.	End.

 It is unlikely that decision-makers will be experts in the relevant business area of the information requested so it is imperative that as many stakeholders in disclosure as possible are identified and where appropriate consulted, including third parties that may be outside the organisation. Doing so will ensure that the evidence of harm and public interest factors are properly gathered.*

REFUSING REQUESTS FOR INFORMATION

LEGISLATION - SECTION 17

- (1) A public authority which, in relation to any request for information, is to any extent relying on a claim that any provision of Part II relating to the duty to confirm or deny is relevant to the request or on a claim that information is exempt information must, within the time for complying with section 1(1), give the applicant a notice which-
 - (a) states that fact,
 - (b) specified the exemption in question, and
 - (c) states (if that would not otherwise be apparent) why the exemption applies.
- (2) Where -
 - (a) in relation to any request for information, a public authority is, as respects any information, relying on a claim-
 - (i) that any provision of Part II which relates to the duty to confirm or deny and is not specified in section 2(3) is relevant to the request, or
 - (ii) that the information is exempt information only by virtue of a provision not specified in section 2(3), and
 - (b) at the time when the notice under subsection (1) is given to the applicant, the public authority (or, in a case falling within section 66(3) or (4), the responsible authority) has not yet reached a decision as to the application of subsection (1)(b) or (2)(b) of section 2, the notice under subsection (1) must indicate that no decision as to the application of that provision has yet been reached and must contain an estimate of the date by which the authority expects that such a decision will have been reached.
- (3) A public authority which, in relation to any request for information, is to any extent relying on a claim that subsection (1)(b) or (2)(b) of section 2 applies must, either in the notice under subsection (1) or in a separate notice given without such time as it is reasonable in the circumstances, state the reasons for claiming -
 - (a) that, in all circumstances of the case, the public interest in maintaining the exclusion of the duty to confirm or deny outweighs the public interest in disclosing whether the authority holds the information, or
 - (b) that, in all circumstances of the case, the public interest in maintaining the exemption outweighs the public interest in disclosing the information.
- (4) A public authority is not obliged to make a statement under subsection (1)(c) or (3) if, to the extent that, the statement would involve the disclosure of information which would itself be exempt information.
- (5) A public authority which, in relation to any request for information, is relying on a claim that section 12 or section 14 applies must, within the time for complying with section 1(1), give the applicant a notice stating that fact.
- (6) Subsection (5) does not apply where-
 - (a) the public authority is relying on a claim that s14 applies,

- (b) the authority has given the applicant a notice, in relation to a previous request for information, stating that it is relying on a such a claim, and
 - (c) it would in all circumstances be unreasonable to expect the authority to serve a further notice under subsection (5) in relation to the current request.
- (7) A notice under subsection (1), (3) or (5) must -
- (a) contain particulars of any procedure provided by the public authority for dealing with complaints about the handling of requests for information or state that the authority does not provide such a procedure, and
 - (b) contain particulars of the right conferred by s50.

GUIDANCE

When refusing either all or part of a request because either:

- The request is deemed vexatious or repeated;
- The cost of compliance exceeds the prescribed limit; or
- The information requested falls under one of the exemptions listed in part II of the Act

then a refusal notice must be issued which complies with s17 of the Act.

There are three occasions when a refusal notice is not required. These are:

- If it appears that a request is vexatious or repeated and there has already been a refusal notice issued to the applicant in relation to a recent similar request stating that the request is vexatious or repeated and it would be unreasonable to do so again.
- If no information is held in relation to the request, although this must still be confirmed in writing and within the 20 day deadline.
- Where s8 of the Act has not been complied with.

A refusal must state that the information is being refused, specify the exemption(s) in question and (if it is not otherwise apparent) state why the exemption applies (Please also refer to the NCND chapter).

This means in practice that the section and subsection of an exemption must be used and its title, which type of exemption it is (qualified, absolute etc.) and an explanation as to what it means and if it is not obvious, why it applies.

If NCND is not being applied and qualified and/or prejudice-based exemptions are engaged, the s17 notice will also need to contain the evidence of harm, the public interest test and the balance test. Plain English should be used wherever possible and the duty to advise and assist the applicant should always be borne in mind.

A refusal notice should be signed by the decision-maker and full details of the authority's complaints procedure and particulars of the rights conferred by s50 (complaint to the ICO) must be included in all responses.

INTERNAL REVIEW

Part VI of the s45 Code of Practice places a duty on public authorities to implement a complaints process to ensure that applicants are able to request an internal review if they are not content with an authority's response. This provides a first review stage for applicants.

If a complaint is received from a dis-satisfied applicant, written acknowledgement of receipt must be provided to the applicant with an indication of when a response may be expected.

The Act does not stipulate a time limit for reviews but the s45 Code of Practice states that they should be dealt with in a 'reasonable timeframe'. The ICO's guidance is that this should be taken to mean 20 working days from receipt of the appeal for a review of the request, extendable in exceptional circumstances by another 20 working days. This timeframe is endorsed by the ACPO CRU.

It is important to be aware that the internal review stage is an opportunity to consider a case completely afresh. Compliance with the legislation is an important component of the process but all relevant considerations should be revisited and appropriately documented.

Internal reviews should not be overly bureaucratic. They are intended to be a fair and impartial means of reviewing the original request process.

The original process should have produced a record of how the original decision was made and this record will provide important information to those conducting the internal review.

The applicant must be fully informed, in writing, of the outcome of the internal review. In all cases, there is a requirement to notify the applicant of the result of the internal review. If revised exemptions or public interest test are being relied upon, a new s17 refusal notice must be issued.

Whatever the result of the review, the applicant must be made aware of their further rights of appeal to the Information Commissioner's Office. Full contact details for the Information Commissioner's Office must be provided to the applicant.

The latest ICO guidance on reviews can be found through the link provided below http://www.ico.gov.uk/what_we_cover/freedom_of_information/guidance.aspx

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

- The review should be undertaken by someone different from, and preferably senior to, the original decision-maker.
- Those forces, whose organisational and process structures make this difficult, should focus on the consideration that the main need is to be able to demonstrate the independence of the reviewer from the influence of the initial process and its decision-maker.
- The reviewer should preferably be trained in and have a good understanding of Freedom of Information issues or be able to directly seek advice from such a person.

- If the nominated reviewer or reviewers have no Freedom of Information experience then they should identify a suitably qualified person to assist with the review, particularly if the main issues relate to legal compliance. The advisor should preferably be someone who had no involvement in the original request.
- It should, where possible, be a one stage procedure and as prompt, thorough, clear and simple as is practical.
- If at all possible, this should apply even when the matter relates to complex matters or significant strategic issues and the review is carried out by a panel.

The checklist on the following page may assist forces in processing internal reviews.

NCND

LEGISLATION - SECTION 1

Section 1 of the Freedom of Information Act 2000 provides two distinct but related rights of access to information which impose corresponding duties on public authorities. These are:

- Section 1(1)(a) the duty to inform the applicant whether or not information is held by the authority, and, if so,
- Section 1(1)(b) the duty to communicate that information to the applicant.

THIS IS A MANDATORY REFERRAL WHEN USING S23(5) AND S24(2)

GENERAL

The Act refers to the first duty as 'the duty to confirm or deny'. Although the second duty - to provide the information - is the one with which most applicants will be concerned, both have equal weight and, when information is exempt but subject to the public interest test, the test is applied to both s1(1)(a) and s1(1)(b) independently.

The thinking behind the separate provisions is quite straightforward. If information has been requested but is not held, it will normally be reasonable to inform the applicant of this fact. However, there may be some exceptional cases where it would not even be right to confirm or deny if the information requested were held. For instance it would not make sense to allow criminals to discover if they were under suspicion and, if so, to discover the extent of those suspicions.

WHY IS NCND NEEDED?

The principle of NCND is long established and is needed to protect harm which may arise if an authority has to confirm or deny whether it holds particular information. In some situations, simply confirming or denying whether an organisation holds a particular category of information could in itself disclose sensitive and damaging information.

A good example of this practice is where a police force is asked for all the information that they have on surveillance operations in relation to particular premises. Any information held is likely to fall within the s30 exemption, as it is held by that authority for the purposes of a criminal investigation (the application of s30 is subject to the balance of the public interest but there is a strong public interest in maintaining the integrity of surveillance operations).

However, simply refusing to provide the requestor with the information would not go far enough to protect the integrity of any operations. If the police force were to confirm or deny that they have the information then that would, in itself, indicate whether or not the police have had an interest in the premises concerned.

To disclose even that amount of information could be prejudicial to any operations or investigations that are taking place or may take place in the future. Hence the necessity to NCND the response under s30(3) of the Act.

WHEN CAN NCND BE USED?

All exemptions except s21 (Information accessible to the applicant by other means) include a provision which enables public authorities, in certain circumstances, to neither confirm nor deny whether it has the information that has been requested.

When withholding information, it is necessary to:

- (a) consider if the exemption applies; and
- (b) consider whether (if the exemption applies) it is necessary for the force to neither confirm nor deny that it holds the information requested.

There is still a requirement to assess the exemption that would (if the information were held) be engaged, even when an NCND approach is adopted. As before these principles are split into qualified and absolute exemptions as outlined below.

NCND QUALIFIED EXEMPTIONS

In cases where the information (if held) would be subject to a qualified exemption, a public interest test must be applied.

If a public authority does not hold the requested information and the applicable exemption is prejudice-based, it should first consider whether denying that it holds the information would have any of the prejudicial effects stated in the section, and then apply the public interest test.

If a public authority does not hold the requested information and the exemption being considered is class-based, a public authority needs to consider whether it would apply if the information were held.

When a public authority holds the requested information, two public interest tests must be separately applied - to the disclosure of the information itself and to the fact that information is held - and it should not be assumed that the outcome in each test will be the same.

NCND WITH ABSOLUTE EXEMPTIONS

Where the information requested is subject to an absolute exemption, there is clearly no need to undertake a public interest test on the information held (or not); what is necessary to determine is would the confirmation or denial of the existence of the information requested (that has been assessed as covered by an absolute exemption) in itself breach these principles. If this is the case then there will be a requirement to NCND the absolute exemption claimed.

An example of when this would be necessary would be if a request were received asking if a named individual had been subject to a criminal conviction. Clearly any response would be subject to s40 exemption as it relates to personal information and any disclosure would breach the individual's Data Protection rights. That said, if the force were to confirm that it held information on that individual by exempting the request, this would provide the applicant with information about a named individual again breaching his/her Data Protection Rights. Clearly there is a need to NCND under s40(5).

RESPONDING TO THE APPLICANT

When a public authority refuses either to disclose requested information or confirm or deny that any information is held, it must under s17(1) of the Act, issue a refusal notice stating the fact of refusal, the exemption used and why the exemption applies. A public authority should be clear in its refusal notice that where the public interest test applies, it has applied it in relation to each duty individually. That said, s17(4) states that a public authority is not obliged to make a statement as to the reasons why NCND is engaged IF the statement itself would involve the disclosure of information which in itself would be exempt. It is the view of the Information Commissioner that whenever possible public authorities should provide an explanation on why the NCND principles are engaged, though if this will compromise the NCND stance then a standard s17(4) statement can be provided.

SECTION 17(4) REFUSAL

An example of a s17(4) refusal is shown below:

The [force] neither confirms nor denies that it holds any of the information requested. To give a statement of the reasons why neither confirming nor denying is appropriate in this case would itself involve the disclosure of exempt information, therefore under s17(4), no explanation can be given. To the extent that section [add section] applies, the [force] has determined that in all the circumstances of the case the public interest in maintaining the exclusion of the duty to neither confirm nor deny outweighs the public interest in confirming whether or not information is held.

PARTIAL NCND

There can be circumstances where a partial NCND is engaged; a public authority may confirm that some information is held (this may be supplied or exempted) though to confirm that this represents all the information in the possession of the authority would in itself be harmful. Authorities may then add to their response that they neither confirm nor deny (under the respective exemption) that any other information is held. This more frequently occurs with the use of exemptions s23 and s24 considered below.

THE USE OF NCND FOR S23 AND S24 MATERIAL

There are clearly considerable sensitivities in relation to material held that may have been provided by or relate to an exempt body, (e.g. the Security Services or SOCA), or would prejudice national security. For these cases there is often a requirement to combine the NCND approach for both s23 and s24 exemptions to prevent disclosing information that would itself breach these principles. These cases will be mandatory referrals to the CRU where advice can be provided.

COMBINED USE OF S23(5) AND S24(2) EXEMPTIONS TOGETHER

There is considerable potential overlap between the information covered by s23 and that covered by s24. Clearly information about the existence or otherwise of information from, or relating to, a security body is information which is also capable of being exempt under s24(2), for the purpose of safeguarding national security.

The use of s23(5) and s24(2) together is possible under the Act (in contrast to s23(1) and s24(1) which are expressly mutually exclusive). The ability to use s23(5) and s24(2) together is important where it is necessary to answer a request in a way that preserves NCND.

Where NCND needs to be maintained for national security purposes, it is important that whenever an exemption from the duty to confirm or deny the existence of information is claimed under s23(5) consideration is always given to claiming the equivalent exemption under s24(2).

Of course, use of s24(2) will require a full consideration of the need for the national security exemption and the public interest in disclosure. However, consideration of the combination is necessary because the nature of s23 inevitably discloses that a security body is involved (or that the absence of involvement of a security body is significant) and use of s23 and s24 together may be the only way that the 'non committal' response that NCND requires, in order to work, can be maintained.

Further, so that it cannot be readily inferred that use of the two exemptions together is itself an indicator of the relevance of security body activity, it is important that where s24 is relied on, reciprocal consideration is given to the justification for relying on s23. NCND may be undermined not only by confirming that there is information held (i.e. implying that the security bodies have an interest in the subject) but also by confirming that there is no information held (i.e. implying that the security bodies do not have an interest).

This whole field is complex and requires considerable experience both in selection of appropriate exemptions and the framing of a response which will need to consider the issues surrounding s17(1) and s17(4) responses. Guidance will be provided by the CRU and draft outline response with which to 'build' the reply letter can be supplied. As previously stated consultation with relevant partner agencies is essential hence the mandatory referral criteria to the CRU where appropriate specialist advice and consultation can be achieved.

PROVIDING INFORMATION

LEGISLATION - SECTION 11

- (1) Where, on making his request for information, the applicant expresses a preference for communication by any one or more of the following means, namely -
 - (a) the provision to the applicant of a copy of the information in permanent form or in another form acceptable to the applicant,
 - (b) the provision to the applicant of a reasonable opportunity to inspect a record containing the information, and
 - (c) the provision to the applicant of a digest or summary of the information in permanent form or in another form acceptable to the applicant, the public authority shall so far as reasonably practicable give effect to that preference.
- (2) In determining for the purposes of this section whether it is reasonably practicable to communicate information by particular means, the public authority may have regard to all the circumstances, including the cost of doing so.
- (3) Where the public authority determines that it is not reasonably practicable to comply with any preference expressed by the applicant in making his request, the authority shall notify the applicant of the reasons for its determination.
- (4) Subject to subsection (1), a public authority may comply with a request by communicating information by any means which are reasonable in the circumstances.

GUIDANCE

MEDIUM OF COMMUNICATION

When making a request for information, an applicant may express a preference for the way in which the information is received. This relates to the medium (ie. electronic, hard copy etc) but not the actual format (ie where a table is provided to be completed).

The Police Service must comply with the preference as far as it is reasonably practicable. In determining whether it is reasonably practicable, the Police Service must have regard to all the circumstances, including the cost of doing so.

When it is not reasonably practicable to comply with a preference, the applicant must be notified of the reasons.

Where no preference is specified for the method of communication, the information can be communicated by any means reasonable in the circumstances.

WHERE INFORMATION IS RELEASED

The applicant must be advised, in writing, of:

- The decision;
- Form and manner of access; and
- The applicant's rights to complain, including details of the internal complaints procedure and the Information Commissioner's details.

COPYRIGHT

Generally, the information provided under the FOIA is not subject to copyright. The CRU would not advocate that copyright be attached routinely to responses but should only be included when information falls within normal copyright rules.

It is ACPO's advice that copyright legislation does not override disclosure under the FOIA.

Third party information is not exempt from disclosure because it is copyrighted. When considering disclosure of copyrighted material, FOI officers should focus on the genuine harm that may be caused by disclosure (usually under s41 and s43).

DISCLOSURE LOG

The Disclosure Log on the force's publication scheme should be updated regularly to ensure all disclosures made under FOI are published.

THE PUBLIC INTEREST TEST

OVERVIEW

Qualified exemptions contained within the Freedom of Information Act are subject to the application of the public interest test. Even if such exemptions are engaged, the information must still be disclosed unless the public interest in maintaining the exemption is greater than the public interest in disclosing it. If the balancing test is equal, the default option should be to disclose.

The 'public interest', is not however, what the public may find interesting, there must be some tangible benefit to the community in such a disclosure. Ultimately it must be something that serves the interests of the public. It is a requirement to identify all the factors which serve these interests and also those which do not, only then can a decision be made.

Under the FOIA, an authority must apply the public interest separately to each relevant exemption. This is to ensure that a force does not then rely on an exemption which the PIT has overcome. The public interest must not be used on its own to refuse to disclose information; it must only be used in conjunction with an exemption.

The exemptions subject to the application of the public interest test are listed in the table below.

THE DUTY TO CONFIRM OR DENY AND THE PIT

Under s1(1)(a), an authority is under a duty to confirm or deny whether it holds information requested. This duty does not arise where the public interest in maintaining the exclusion of the duty to confirm or deny outweighs the public interest in disclosing. To this end most exemptions also contain a subsection which allows a 'neither confirm nor deny response', if appropriate.

Practitioners often make the mistake of only considering the public interest in relation to disclosing the information, (s1(1)(b)). It is important to also be aware of the requirements to consider the PIT in relation to s1(1)(a), if there is harm in confirming or denying that information is held and a qualified exemption is being relied upon, a PIT must be completed.

The difficulty is in grasping the point that the debate now will be purely based on the issues with confirming or not that the information actually exists, rather than disclosing it.

Reference should be made to the separate chapter in this manual on neither confirm nor deny, but the below fictional case study may assist in understanding the differences.

Example

Force's A and B are asked for the technical details of a particular piece of covert equipment. Harm is identified that engages s31(3) Law enforcement, as confirming or not whether the information is held will disclose the forces tactical capability. S31 is a qualified exemption, so the decision-maker has to first consider the PIT in relation to confirming whether the information is even held.

In Force A the PIT issues identified are the detrimental impact to the public of that equipment becoming compromised versus their right to know of its usage and that funds for fighting crime are appropriately spent. On balance, as the procurement processes in place and independent financial auditing serve the needs of the public in ensuring that funds are spent appropriately, it is decided that the former is the most persuasive argument and an NCND stance by virtue of s31(3) is the response provided.

In Force B, the PIT issues are virtually identical except that also favouring confirmation or denial is the fact that the force took part in a 'fly-on-the-wall' programme which showed the equipment being used. On balance it is found that the public interest is better served by confirming information is held and s31(3) is overcome.

Force B then have to move on to consider the PIT in relation to s31(1) as disclosure of the technical information requested will enable criminals to put in place counter measures. Now, the issues are the effects on the public of crime being more difficult to detect versus them being better informed, enabling more accurate debate and accountability. It is decided that the balance lies with the former and the force confirms information is held, but refuses to disclose it by virtue of s31(1).

CONDUCTING THE PUBLIC INTEREST TEST

A thorough, effective test will largely depend on the decision-maker's research, coupled with the ability to make out reasoned arguments. It should be objective, but it can become subjective if the individual either does not possess the relevant skills or is unduly influenced by external influences and/or their own views and prejudices.

The public interest test should be applied in a manner that is in-keeping with the spirit of the Act. That is to say there is an assumption that public authorities will provide information requested unless an exemption applies and the public interest favours retention of the information over disclosure. The burden of proof lies with the decision-maker to establish whether there are sufficient grounds to justify an exemption.

The starting point for conducting the test becomes the collation of all the relevant factors. It is unlikely that any one individual can provide all of this information and it should be obtained from a variety of sources. If not approached in this manner there is a risk that the views of the person providing the factors actually dictate the end result, or their own lack of knowledge is detrimental to the process.

The below fictional case study may help demonstrate this point:

Example

Forces A and B receive identical requests for statistical data on rape in a small policing team area.

The FOI Officer in Force A asks the force Performance Department, who produce the statistics, for any harm in disclosure and if so what the PIT considerations might be. The response is that they can see no harm. The information is disclosed, this raises public awareness in the area, resulting in a local news item and an offender ceasing their activities due to the publicity. This compromises an ongoing covert operation.

In Force B, the FOI Officer asks for any Harm and PIT considerations from the Performance Department, the policing teams Sergeant and the DCI responsible for the force's rape strategy. From the Sergeant they learn of several local community issues, and the DCI tells them about an ongoing covert operation and the problems a disclosure will cause. The FOI officer works through the information provided and finds there is sufficient harm to engage s31(1), the PIT looks at the issues of the detriment to the public in a potential rapist escaping justice versus the need for the community to be aware of current issues. The balance falls in favour of non-disclosure, and a complex refusal notice is issued. They brief the SIO on the covert operation and the force media department. The local media are engaged and work with the police to not highlight the refusal as it appears on the force disclosure log. The offender is brought to justice a short time later, and then together with the usual media releases the FOI officer puts the statistics into the public domain.

We have established that the role of the decision-maker is to identify all the relevant issues and incorporate those into a decision making framework. The full process is outlined in this manual and the following is just the PIT phase.

1. Identify all of the exemptions that are engaged with the disclosure of the information.
2. Filter those exemptions to identify which ones are qualified and which are absolute. It is suggested that if many exemptions are engaged there is little benefit in using all of them and the most appropriate ones should be used. There can be a temptation to rely only on absolute ones, as there is no PIT, but you should only do so if they are firmly engaged, and actually cover all of the information requested. You may not be allowed to re-introduce exemptions later in the request lifecycle but forces are also discouraged from adopting a 'shotgun approach' by using excessive numbers.
3. For every qualified exemption there is a need to identify and outline the positives and negatives in disclosure in relation to each exemption. The Information Tribunal in the England/Bexley case (EA/2006/0060, 0066) recognised that when considering public interest factors in favour of maintaining the exemption, a public authority should only consider the particular interest which the exemption seeks to protect, for example the prevention of crime. In contrast, the public interest factors in favour of disclosure are not restricted in this way, and can include the general public interests in the promotion of transparency, accountability, public understanding and involvement in the democratic process.
4. If the PIT obviously favours disclosure then that exemption should then be disregarded.
5. The remaining exemptions then need to be looked at as a whole, to see if the balance of the PIT issues favours disclosure. Only now can a decision be made.

The following table of some of the exemptions more commonly used by the police service and the issues likely to be relevant may assist in your research. It is not an exhaustive list, and the weight of each point will vary from case to case. It also does not take into account the harm that may have been identified even though this will always be relevant to the public interest.

To be valid factors in favour of non-disclosure, there must be a clear relationship between the factors, the information and the exemption and this must be articulated. Factors favouring disclosure can be more generic and wider in nature.

CONSIDERATIONS THAT ARE INVALID

In addition, there are a number of criteria that may not be considered as part of the public interest test or may be applied only in limited circumstances:

EMBARRASSMENT	Potential embarrassment to the force, Police Service or an individual officer on release of information is not a valid public interest consideration in favour of non-disclosure.
HIGH PUBLIC OFFICE	Where the subject of the information, the giver or the recipient of the information holds high office, this is not in itself sufficient to weigh against disclosure. An assessment of the consequences of the disclosure of the particular issue is required.
POLICY DEVELOPMENT	Even where information relates to policy development, this does not establish a public interest consideration favouring non-disclosure. Even if policy is under review, it still may be in the public interest to release.
CANDOUR AND FRANKNESS	Claims that disclosure would prejudice the supply of frank and candid information in the future can only be considered where there is a very particular factual basis to support this view. The possibility of future publicity through disclosure may deter immediate release and should provide an incentive to improve the quality of the information/record prior to disclosure.
DISCLOSURE OF CONFUSING OR MISLEADING INFORMATION	In most cases, the force would have a means of avoiding such a prejudicial effect by releasing new or revised information to rectify any inaccuracies or clarify the situation. If a certain course of action has not been considered and should have been, this is not enough to withhold.
INFORMATION/RECORDS HELD DO NOT FAIRLY REFLECT THE REASONS FOR A DECISION	Where this occurs, the force would have the opportunity to provide additional information that accurately explains the reason for the decision.
DRAFT DOCUMENTS	There may be benefits of public access to draft material, to further the accountability and public planning process. Draft documents may therefore be disclosed. Disclosure of this kind allows members of the public to examine the process by which a decision has been reached, thus serving the public interest.
GOVERNMENT PROTECTIVE MARKING SCHEME (GPMS)	The marking of material under the GPMS will not, in itself, be valid grounds for withholding information. GPMS indicates how a document should be transported, handled and stored. The content of the material should be examined and the relevant exemptions applied only after discussion with the data owner and other relevant parties. Time elapsed since the document was marked under GPMS may also be a factor in any decision to release or withhold.

BALANCE TEST

After establishing all the facts for and against disclosure, and filtering out those exemptions which are obviously overcome, a decision then has to be made on what are the most persuasive arguments. This is probably one of the most challenging areas for a decision-maker, especially if it appears that others within the organisation have already made up their minds, without proper consideration of these factors. Force policies and procedures should support and empower FOI staff to make proper decisions, based on the evidence that they have before them. This requires high levels of skill and judgement and is not purely an administrative function. It is imperative that they are appropriately trained and have access to not only all the information requested but also the background and history of everything relevant to the case.

When applying the PIT, the factors favouring disclosure and non-disclosure should always be recorded, this will form the basis of any future audit trail and help justify disclosure or non-disclosure in the event of challenges or appeals to the decision. It will also form the basis for any refusal notice. If released, it can be kept in a less formal format.

In addition to justifying non disclosure to the applicant, the decision-maker may also be held to account by the ICO, Information Tribunal or even a court. You should ensure that your records will provide all you need to do so, especially as it may be several months in the future.

It will also be the case, that if a forces request response impacts on another, or the business area concerned, then the ACPO team are likely to require a copy of the rationale for disclosure in order to mitigate any adverse effects.

SECTION 21

INFORMATION REASONABLY ACCESSIBLE BY OTHER MEANS

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information which is reasonably accessible to the applicant otherwise than under s1 is exempt information.
- (2) For the purposes of subsection (1)-
 - (a) information may be reasonably accessible to the applicant even though it is accessible only on payment, and
 - (b) information is to be taken to be reasonably accessible to the applicant if it is information which the public authority or any other person is obliged by or under any enactment to communicate (otherwise than by making the information available for inspection) to members of the public on request, whether free of charge or on payment.
- (3) For the purposes of subsection (1), information which is held by a public authority and does not fall within subsection (2)(b) is not to be regarded as reasonably accessible to the applicant merely because the information is available from the public authority itself on request, unless the information is made available in accordance with the authority's publication scheme and any payment required is specified in, or determined in accordance with, the scheme.

EXEMPTION TYPE: Absolute
Class-Based

GUIDANCE

When using this exemption, the applicant must be provided with details of where the information may be obtained from. The provision of information under the FOIA is generally free of charge (apart from what's allowable in the Fees Regulations). However, it is permissible to cite this exemption when the information is normally provided for a fee. For example, road traffic accident/collision reports.

A public authority must clearly indicate on its publication scheme if it is making a charge for the supply of information. It may be appropriate to include on the publication scheme a list of documents and other information that is available for a fee.

This exemption may be applied if the information requested is publicly available on a website (not just the force's own website) or in the publication of another individual, organisation or publisher.

To apply this exemption, information must be physically and geographically accessible to the applicant. If it is available in one location only and there is a requirement to source the information in person, this may not be considered 'reasonably' accessible.

Charges for information may be made where:

- Information is already provided for a fee under a statutory scheme; and
- The information is already published as part of the authority's publication scheme and a charge has already been indicated for the class of information in question.

The publication scheme must specify the format in which information is published. Information provided in electronic format should be offered as a hard copy alternative for those applicants without reasonable access to the Internet.

Where a public authority has a legal obligation to publish certain types of information, this too should be considered reasonably accessible, even though it may not appear on, or be described in, the publication scheme. This applies if the information requested is available by virtue of the legal obligations of another public authority to publish.

The exception is information that is available only on inspection, by visiting a specific location for example. In this case, the information is not considered to be reasonably accessible even though the authority has a legal obligation to publish it (unless it falls within a class of information that is included on the authority's publication scheme).

Information that is normally made available in inspection is not 'reasonably accessible' if:

- The applicant lives a considerable distance away;
- The applicant has mobility problems; or
- There are other factors that may influence an applicant's ability to view the information.

In these cases, the authority may consider providing a hard copy of the information - though this does not mean it is obliged to every time.

The authority is under no obligation to translate information that is released in response to a request into other languages. It may, however, be reasonable for the authority to translate the original request and then consider translation on a case-by-case basis.

Where an applicant has a disability or may require the information requested in an alternative form - such as in Braille or an audio-tape - the onus is on the authority to consider providing it in the format requested if it is 'reasonably whom the information is reasonably accessible, they may fall foul of other statutory duties laid down by the Welsh Language Act 1993, the Race Relations Amendment Act 2000 and the Disability Discrimination Act 1995.

Public authorities may also have their own internal policies that commit them to delivering a certain level of service for members of the non-English speaking community. It is important that members of staff responsible for dealing with FOI requests are aware of existing policies regarding access to information for those with physical disabilities or for non-English speakers.

When a special case is put to the authority for information published, where disability or other difficulties result in problems in accessing the information (such as lack of Internet access), then it will be left to the individual force to decide on how best to provide the applicant with the information requested.

ADDITIONAL GUIDANCE

When considering the application of this exemption (and also s40), FOI Officers can take into account the identity of the applicant. For example, s21 may be used where the applicant is an employee of the organisation and is able to access information on the force's Intranet.

S21 can only be relied upon under CPIA if the information has already been provided under CPIA and not on speculation that it may be provided under CPIA.

SECTION 22

INFORMATION INTENDED FOR FUTURE PUBLICATION

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt information if -
- (a) the information is held by the public authority with a view to its publication, by the authority or any other person, at some future date (whether determined or not),
 - (b) the information was already held with a view to such publication at the time the request for information was made, and
 - (c) it is reasonable in all circumstances that the information should be withheld from disclosure until the date referred to in paragraph.
- (2) The duty to confirm or deny is excluded where compliance with that duty would involve the disclosure of any information (whether or not already recorded) which falls within subsection (1).

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Class-based

APPLY: Public interest test

GUIDANCE

S22 may be engaged when there is an intention to publish the information requested at the time of receipt. Without this intention, s22 may not be used and authorities may not take the decision to publish the information after the request for information is received. No actual publication date is required for s22 to be engaged. However, the Act states that the publication date set must be 'reasonable'. Where the date for publication has still to be determined, s22(1)(c) may only be cited where it is reasonable to postpone publication until an unspecified date.

S22 may only be cited where the information that is intended for publication is exactly what has been requested by the applicant.

This exemption is concerned with the timing of the release of information. It is not concerned with the suitability of the content for release. The decision to publish must have already been made at the time the request is received, subject to possible amendments.

This exemption also covers information that another authority or person (individual or organisation) intends to publish. One public authority, for example, may have been given a draft or document that another intends to publish. The exemption may also be cited if an alternative body, other than the one to which the application was originally made, is planning to publish the information requested.

Where a request for information is directed at information that falls within a class defined in the authority's publication scheme, it may be assumed that the information is intended for publication, even if it has not already been published. Thus, the decision becomes one relating to timing rather than disclosing or withholding the information. The authority must consider whether it is in the public interest to release information earlier than originally planned. Whilst authorities may wish to wait until one set of meeting minutes is approved at a subsequent meeting prior to releasing them to the public, it should recognise the public interest in providing draft minutes to applicants who may either wish to attend or have an input into the subsequent meeting.

If there is already an intention to publish requested information, it is generally the case that the sooner the intended date of publication, the stronger the case for applying exemption.

Even if the information is in a draft form and may be amended or omitted prior to the final version being agreed, this exemption still applies. Whilst the words may differ from draft to final document, the information imparted probably will not. Where the information exists in draft or rough form only or if it forms a part of a larger body of work or information, it may be more difficult to apply s22.

Reasons such as political embarrassment and administrative inefficiency may not be used as reasons to delay publication.

SECTION 23

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information held by a public authority is exempt information if it was directly or indirectly supplied to the public authority by, or relates to, any of the bodies specified in subsection (3).
- (2) A certificate signed by a Minister of the Crown certifying that the information to which it applies was directly or indirectly supplied by, or relates to, any of the bodies specified in subsection (3) shall, subject to s60, be conclusive evidence of that fact.
- (3) The bodies referred to in subsections (1) and (2) are—
 - (a) the Security Service,
 - (b) the Secret Intelligence Service,
 - (c) the Government Communications Headquarters (GCHQ),

- (4) In subsection (3)(c) 'the Government Communications Headquarters' includes any unit or part of a unit of the armed forces of the Crown which is for the time being required by the Secretary of State to assist the Government Communications Headquarters in carrying out its functions.
- (5) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if, or to the extent that, compliance with s1(1)(a) would involve the disclosure of any information (whether or not already recorded) which was directly or indirectly supplied to the public authority by, or relates to, any of the bodies specified in subsection (3).

NATIONAL SECURITY

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information which does not fall within section 23(1) is exempt information if exemption from section 1(1)(b) is required for the purpose of safeguarding national security.
- (2) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if, or to the extent that, exemption from section 1(1)(a) is required for the purpose of safeguarding national security.
- (3) A certificate signed by a Minister of the Crown certifying that exemption from section 1(1)(b), or from section 1(1)(a) and (b), is, or at any time was, required for the purpose of safeguarding national security shall, subject to s60, be conclusive evidence of that fact.

THIS IS A MANDATORY REFERRAL TO THE CRU

GUIDANCE

Sections 23 and 24 are often very closely linked.

A s23 exemption is applicable to information received from or related to a number of bodies specifically listed in the Act. The s24 exemption is applicable to information, the non-disclosure of which is necessary to safeguard national security.

In certain circumstances, it will be necessary to use the two exemptions together. In other circumstances the two exemptions are mutually exclusive and cannot be used jointly. It is ACPO policy that the data owner must always be consulted when a s23 or s24 exemption is considered. This procedure must be followed whether the data is held or, if not, would likely have come from a s23 body.

CONSULTATION

Due to the sensitivities of these exemptions it is MANDATORY that responses considering or likely to engage these exemptions are referred to the ACPO Central Referral Unit.

The Central Referral Unit Manager will engage the broader consultation procedures which must be undertaken under nationally agreed partnership protocols.

MINISTERIAL CERTIFICATES

Occasionally at the point of an ICO appeal or Information Tribunal (IT), it may be necessary to consider the use of a 'ministerial certificate' for s23 and s24 exemptions. The effect of a certificate, signed by a Minister of the Crown, is to provide conclusive evidence that an exemption is engaged and avoid the need for the ICO or IT to make judgement on information with which they have no experience. It should be noted that for s24 exemptions the use of a certificate does not provide the public interest balance on non-disclosure only that the exemption applies. Responsibility for the PIT balance is maintained by the ICO. That said, there are unlikely to be circumstances that support the release of information that could jeopardise national security.

Either the Information Commissioner or the applicant can appeal against the certificate, to the National Security Appeals Panel of the Information Tribunal (NSAP).

This is a complex and highly sensitive process and will be led by the CRU in close consultation with the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) and relevant stakeholder agencies.

GENERAL POINTS

Information Supplied by, or Relating to Exempt Security Bodies

This absolute exemption covers any information supplied by or relating to an exempt body. Within the policing environment this is likely to be information from or linked to SOCA and the Security Services, though broad consideration of all exempt bodies is necessary when considering complex requests. Though there is no specific definition of 'relates to' within the legislation, FOI practitioners are required to adopt a cautious approach when assessing these facts.

Information Covered by this Exemption

As the security bodies are not 'public authorities' for the purposes of the Act, they are not under any duty themselves to disclose information. It is only information supplied by them to departments, or information that relates to them and held by departments, that needs to be, and is, addressed by s23.

Insofar as the exemption relates to the source, rather than the content of the information, it is not possible to give an indicative list of the types of information that may be covered by s23. Insofar as the application of the exemption turns on whether information 'relates' to the security bodies, it will be capable of covering a range of subject matter of a policy, operational or administrative nature.

Considerations

The Act does not specify how remote from the original source information needs to be before it is no longer to be regarded as 'directly' or 'indirectly supplied' by, or that it relates to, one of the security bodies. However, if it is possible to trace a discrete piece of information back through each transmission to its original source, then this would seem to be sufficient, however many hands it has passed through and even if its wording has changed along the way.

In line with core NCND principles decision-makers should bear in mind that acknowledging that no information supplied by or relating to any of the security bodies is held may in itself constitute information about one of the security bodies, and that in some circumstances it may be appropriate to apply the 'neither confirm nor deny' provisions under s23(5) and/or s24(2), even when no information is held.

While there is no right of access under the FOIA to information supplied by or relating to the security bodies it may still be possible to disclose information, quite separately from the Act, if disclosure is officially authorised. However, it remains important that the disclosure of any information that could be covered by s23 (including historical records) takes into account other relevant legal considerations, and that the decision is taken after consultation with the respective legal and security experts.

NATIONAL SECURITY

The test to be applied when considering whether to claim a s24 exemption is not whether the information relates to national security but whether the exemption is required for the purpose of safeguarding national security. That is, to claim the exemption it must be possible to identify an undesirable effect on national security, or the risk of such an undesirable effect, that claiming the exemption would prevent.

This exemption applies to information not covered by s23, though it may on occasion be necessary to use both exemptions together.

It will be essential to consider circumstances where actual harm has, or will, occur to national security; the need to prevent harm occurring; to avoid the risk of harm occurring; and whether the requested information could cause damage if put together with other available information.

Taken together, the following statements on national security may form the basis for identifying the type of information which falls into this category.

- The security of the nation includes its well being and the protection of its defence and foreign policy interests, as well as its survival;
- The nation does not refer only to the territory of the UK, but includes its citizens, wherever they may be, or its assets wherever they may be, as well as the UK's system of government;
- Potential threats to, or otherwise being relevant to, the safety or well-being of the nation, including terrorism, espionage, subversion, the pursuit of the Government's defence and foreign policies, and the economic well-being of the United Kingdom.
- Other areas may include the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the protection of the Critical National Infrastructure, such as the water supply or national grid, from actions intended to cause catastrophic damage.

NCND EXISTENCE OF INFORMATION

Full guidance on the Neither Confirm Nor Deny principles can be found within this manual. Careful consideration is required when assessing the need to confirm or deny matters exempt by way of s23 and s24 individually or combined.

Where responses are considered for information relating to exempt bodies or national security purposes, in most cases it will be necessary to assess adopting an NCND approach: s23(5) and/or s24(2). The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if to comply would itself disclose information, which is exempt under the Act. The use of s23 and s24 together may be the only way that the 'non-committal' response that NCND requires in order to work, may be maintained. So that it cannot be readily inferred that use of the two exceptions together is itself an indicator of the relevant security body activity, it is also important that where s24 is relied on, reciprocal consideration is given to the justification for relying on s23.

SECTION 26

DEFENCE

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt information if its disclosure under this Act would, or would be likely to prejudice -
- (a) the defence of the British Islands or of any colony, or
 - (b) the capability, effectiveness or security of any relevant forces.
- (2) In subsection (1)(b) "relevant forces" means—
- (a) the armed forces of the Crown, and
 - (b) any forces co-operating with those forces, or any part of any of those forces.
- (3) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if, or to the extent that, compliance with section 1(1)(a) would, or would be likely to, prejudice any of the matters mentioned in subsection 1.

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Prejudice-based

APPLY: Evidence of harm
Public interest test

GUIDANCE

The term 'co-operation' may include:

- Working with the UK's forces on a particular project or to include a much wider range of 'friendly' forces; and
- Information about the capabilities and vulnerabilities of forces working with UK forces.

The effect of disclosing information on the relationship between the UK and any other state should also be considered as a relevant factor in the public interest test when applying this exemption.

There is no current ACPO interpretation of this exemption and ACPO feels this exemption will have limited application within the Police Service.

SECTION 27

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt information if its disclosure under this Act would, or would be likely to, prejudice -
 - (a) relations between the United Kingdom and any other State,
 - (b) relations between the United Kingdom and any international organisation or international court,
 - (c) the interests in the United Kingdom abroad, or
 - (d) the promotion or protection by the United Kingdom of its interests abroad.
- (2) Information is also exempt information if it is confidential information obtained from a State other than the United Kingdom or from an international organisation or international court.
- (3) For the purposes of this section, any information obtained from a State, organisation or court is confidential at any time while the terms on which it was obtained require it to be held in confidence or while the circumstances in which it was obtained make it reasonable for the State, organisation or court to expect that it will be so held.
- (4) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if, or to the extent that, compliance with section 1(1)(a)–
 - (a) would, or would be likely to, prejudice any of the matters mentioned in subsection (1), or
 - (b) would involve the disclosure of any information (whether or not already recorded) which is confidential information obtained from a State other than the United Kingdom or from an international organisation or international court.

EXEMPTION TYPE: s27(1)
Qualified
Prejudice-based s27(2)
Qualified
Class-based

GUIDANCE

S27(1) is prejudice-based and covers disclosures that would, or would be likely to, prejudice international relations.

This is a broad exemption that is designed to cover the 'interests of the United Kingdom abroad' and 'the promotion or protection by the United Kingdom of its interests abroad'.

The exemption, however, does not cover the interests of specific groups within the state. Rather, this provision is designed to protect general national interests.

This exemption is class-based and covers information received in confidence from other states and international bodies.

The duty to confirm or deny the existence of information is also excluded to the extent that compliance with that duty would:

'involve the disclosure of any information (whether or not already recorded) which is confidential information obtained from a State other than the United Kingdom or from an international organisation or international court.'

Since s27(2) is class-based, there is no need for a public authority to establish the specific prejudice that would occur from disclosure.

There is some overlap between s27(2) and s41 (Information in confidence). However, s41 applies to the disclosure of information obtained from another person whilst s27(2) refers to information obtained from a state, organisation or court that:

- Is confidential at any time while the terms on which it was obtained require it to be held in confidence; or
- While the circumstances in which it was obtained make it reasonable for the state, organisation or court to expect that it will be so held.

This provision is therefore concerned with the conditions under which the information was obtained.

It is ACPO's view that this exemption will be used in limited circumstances and with particular reference to forces with international responsibilities or in respect of forces that have relationships with forces overseas.

SECTION 28

RELATIONS WITHIN UK

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt information if its disclosure under this Act would, or would be likely to, prejudice relations between any administration in the United Kingdom and any other such administration.
- (2) In subsection (1) 'administration in the United Kingdom' means -
- (a) the government of the United Kingdom
 - (b) the Scottish Administration
 - (c) the Executive Committee of the Northern Ireland Assembly
 - (d) the National Assembly for Wales
- (3) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if, or to the extent that, compliance with section 1(1)(a) would, or would be likely to, prejudice any of the matters mentioned in subsection (1).

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Prejudice-based

APPLY: Evidence of harm
Public interest test

GUIDANCE

This exemption was included in the Act to protect relations between the devolved administrations of the UK.

Where the release of information would compromise these relations, this exemption may be applied.

In contrast to s27 (International relations), there is no specific class-based exemption covering information received in confidence from another administration in the UK.

It is ACPO's view that this exemption will have very limited relevance to the Police Service.

SECTION 29

THE ECONOMY

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt information if its disclosure under this Act would, or would be likely to prejudice -
- (a) the economic interest of the United Kingdom or of any part of the United Kingdom
 - (b) the financial interests of any administration in the United Kingdom, as defined by section 28(2)
- (2) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if, or to the extent that, compliance with section 1(1)(a) would, or would be likely to, prejudice any of the matters mentioned in subsection (1).

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Prejudice-based

APPLY: Evidence of harm
Public interest test

GUIDANCE

Categories of information that might fall within this exemption may include premature disclosure of governmental intentions relating to taxation or to the disposal of substantial property holdings owned by the state that would be likely to lead to the prejudice of the short-term economic interests of the UK. This exemption may also be used for information that would, if released, prejudice the economics of a region, in terms of inward investment for example.

It may be more difficult, however, for public authorities to prove that disclosure would cause prejudice in the longer term.

It is believed that s29 will not be a key exemption for the Police Service.

INVESTIGATIONS AND PROCEEDINGS CONDUCTED BY PUBLIC AUTHORITIES

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information held by a public authority is exempt information if it has at any time been held by the authority for the purposes of -
 - (a) Any investigation which the public authority has a duty to conduct with a view to it being ascertained (i) whether a person should be charged with an offence, or (ii) whether a person charged with an offence is guilty of it,
 - (b) Any investigation which is conducted by the authority and in the circumstances may lead to a decision by the authority to institute criminal proceedings which the authority had the power to conduct, or
 - (c) Any criminal proceedings, which the authority has the power to conduct.
- (2) Information held by a public authority is exempt if -
 - (a) it was obtained or recorded by the authority for the purpose of its functions relating to -
 - (i) Investigations falling within subsection (1)(a) or (b),
 - (ii) Criminal proceedings which the authority has the power to conduct,
 - (iii) Investigations (other than investigations falling within subsection (1)(a) or (b)) which are conducted by the authority for any of the purposes specified in section 31(2) and either by virtue of Her Majesty's prerogative or by virtue of powers conferred by or under any enactment, or
 - (iv) Civil proceedings which are brought by or on behalf of the authority and arise out of such investigations, and
 - (b) it relates to the obtaining of information from confidential sources.
- (3) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise in relation to information which is (or if it were held by the public authority would be) exempt information by virtue of subsection (1) or (2).

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Class-based

APPLY: Public interest test

GUIDANCE

S30 creates an exemption for information:

- Which is or has been held for the purposes of a criminal investigation;
- Which is or has been held for criminal proceedings conducted by a public authority; or
- Which was obtained or recorded for various investigative functions from confidential sources and relates to those confidential sources.

Information covered by this exemption is subject to the 30 year rule. If this time period has expired, forces will still need to ensure that other exemptions such as s31/s40 are not still engaged.

The first part of the exemption covers particular criminal investigations and proceedings and the second part provides protection to information about confidential sources on a wider range of investigative functions as listed under s30(2).

This exemption covers information held at any time for the purposes of an investigation, whether the case is ongoing, closed or abandoned.

It is ACPO's view that information relating to ongoing investigations is unlikely to ever be released under FOIA (subject to the application of the outcome of the PIT), nor that relating to confidential sources. The disclosure issues with regard to sources are well known (CHIS), but less so investigations themselves. To disclose ongoing investigations would risk undermining the human rights of any suspect to a fair trial and more importantly the rights of the victim, if a prosecution were to fail due to an adverse disclosure. There are already in place established procedures for disclosure when to do so would aid an investigation, for example an appeal for witnesses through media channels. FOIA is not the correct discipline to use for such matters.

RELATIONSHIP WITH S31

There are areas of overlap between s30 and s31. Whereas s30 provides an exemption in relation to a particular criminal investigation, s31 provides for general steps taken in relation to law enforcement.

It is clear within s31 itself that where s30 applies s31 cannot be used. This should be borne in mind when analysing investigation material subject to a request. All the information may not be covered by s30 as there needs to be a link between the information and the investigation. For example, a crime file may contain a policy or procedural reminder on its completion and this would not be information held for the purposes of a specific investigation, therefore engaging s31 instead, if the disclosure would prejudice law enforcement.

ATTRACTION OF NCND WHEN S30 IS ENGAGED

There is an option within s30 to Neither Confirm Nor Deny the information is held (see NCND chapter).

The success of many investigations depends on ensuring the information is not disclosed prematurely. It is likely that a non-committal response will be required when the existence of an investigation is not yet in the public domain or it is a necessary response to protect the identity of some informants or defendants.

For example a request stating 'please disclose copies of the investigation into Smith' whether held or not is likely to attract an NCND response, unless such an investigation is already public knowledge. To use exemptions or state 'not held' could actually disclose sensitive and personal information.

THE PUBLIC INTEREST TEST

S30 is a qualified exemption. This of course means that even if the information requested is exempt, the public interest in maintaining the exemption may be outweighed by a wider public benefit in disclosure.

A critical issue is likely to be the timing of the disclosure. Factors favouring disclosure are likely to be weaker while an investigation is being carried out, or is unsolved and subject to Criminal Procedures and Investigations Act (CPIA) review, for the reasons outlined above. However, once an investigation is completed, the public interest in understanding why an investigation reached a particular conclusion, or in seeing that the investigation has been properly carried out, could well outweigh the public interest in maintaining the exemption.

This will still be relative to the factors outlined in the public interest chapter; however, the ICO has outlined his view that cases where justice was not done, either to the accused person or victim, may shift the public interest towards disclosure. This is especially so in cases where procedural failure or mismanagement is the cause.

CASE-BY-CASE

An important element when dealing with requests for investigations is the requirement to deal with each request on a case-by-case basis. Also, there is a need for each piece of information to be assessed. Simply applying a 'blanket' exemption because the information requested is an investigation, is not valid. Decision Notices and tribunal cases have shown that this is flawed because the PIT may well be different for each piece of information. For example a benign note on the file discussing charging options will have different considerations to a sensitive witness statement. The most cost and time effective method to do this will be to establish exactly what information the applicant really wants, potentially removing the need to analyse each separate piece.

It has been established from the Information Tribunal that even though s30 is a class-based exemption, there is a requirement to clearly demonstrate in any refusal, what prejudice the investigation would suffer if the information were to be disclosed.

SECTION 31

 - (c) the administration of justice
 - (d) the assessment or collection of any tax or duty or any imposition of a similar nature

- (3) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if, or to the extent that, compliance with section 1(1)(a) would, or would be likely to, prejudice any of the matters mentioned in subsection (1).

EXEMPTION TYPE:	Qualified Prejudice-based
APPLY:	Evidence of harm Public interest test

GUIDANCE

S31 creates an exemption from the right to disclose information if releasing it would, or would be likely to cause significant harm to the functions of a public authority.

Public authorities may engage this exemption firstly either in relation to certain 'activities' listed under sections (1)(a) to (f), of the exemption which are:

- (a) The prevention and detection of crime.
- (b) The apprehension or prosecution of offenders.
- (c) The administration of justice.
- (d) The assessment or collection of tax.
- (e) The operation of immigration controls.
- (f) The maintenance of security and good order in prisons.

or secondly carrying out a 'specified purpose', s(1)(g) to (i) as outlined in s31(2):

- Determining whether a person has broken the law;
- Determining whether a person is responsible for improper conduct;
- Determining whether there are or may be circumstances which would justify regulatory action;
- Determining a person's fitness or competence to manage a corporate body or to continue in any profession or other activity which they are or would like to become authorised to carry on;
- Determining the cause of an accident;
- Protecting charities against misconduct or mismanagement in their administration or recovering the property of charities;
- Securing the health, safety and welfare of staff: and
- Protecting people other than staff against risk to health or safety arising from the actions of a person's staff.

This would appear on the surface somewhat complex, exacerbated by the terminology used in the guidance issued by the ICO on this exemption. The guidance refers to 'stand-alone activities' and 'qualified purposes', although these phrases are not contained within the legislation.

The use of this exemption by the Police Service is somewhat simplified due to the fact that it obviously carries out all of the activities of the prevention and detection of crime, the apprehension or prosecution of offenders and the administration of justice listed under (a), (b) and (c). The Service also has limited exposure to the activities outlined in (e) and (f) where policing involves the physical security of entry points to the UK or the external security of prisons. The Service has no functions that would involve the activities in d.

It will be for decision-makers to establish whether the disclosure will or be likely to prejudice one of these activities, so that s31(1) is correctly considered. If a specified purpose is likely to be compromised by disclosure, s31(2) will be engaged instead. It is ACPO's view that it will be rare for the latter to be used as the fact that the Police Service obviously carries out a law enforcement function, as an activity, is an established fact.

This should not however, lead practitioners to believe that they do not need to understand the differences between 'activities' and 'specified functions'. The use of this exemption is not restricted to those authorities whose information is simply covered by it, as is the case with s30.

For example a local council may be asked for information that damages a police function, enabling them to engage the exemption legitimately. This is particularly relevant when reviewing information which has been generated by, or mutually shared, as part of partnership working.

WHAT TYPE OF INFORMATION IS COVERED?

The information potentially covered by this exemption is very broad. As a general, but not exhaustive guide, consideration should be given to any disclosure which will or could prejudice:

- Crime prevention, detection or reduction.
- Arrest or prosecution of offenders.
- Penalties for criminal behaviour.
- Breaches of military law.
- Administrative arrangements of courts.
- Court functions.
- Witness care.
- Transport of defendants.
- Civil case processes.
- Effective and efficient conduct of a police force or the service.
- Security and protection arrangements.

RELATIONSHIP WITH S30 (INVESTIGATIONS ETC)

There are areas of overlap between s30 and s31. It is mandated within s31 itself that where s30 applies to information, then s31 cannot also be engaged. So although these two exemptions cannot be applied to the same piece of information, there may a need to still use both exemptions in response to a request. It is imperative, therefore, that an applicant is told exactly which exemption is relevant to which part of the information.

For example, a request for information in relation to an investigation is received. The request asks for information about the decision-making process behind key decisions in the investigative process. It would appear that s30 is engaged and therefore s31 is excluded. However, examination of the case papers shows that various procedural documents and Manuals of Guidance are also relevant to the request, not just the case papers.

Since s30 only covers:

'Information held by a public authority if it has at any time been held by the authority for the purposes of any investigation which the public authority has a duty to conduct', this will cover the case papers but not the other documents. If the disclosure of the additional documents will or be likely to prejudice law enforcement, then s31 will also be engaged.

ATTRACTION OF NCND WHEN S31 IS ENGAGED

There is an option within s31 to Neither Confirm Nor Deny the information is held. (For additional information on using NCND, please see the relevant section). An example where a force may wish to NCND using s31 may be where a particular tactic is not widely known in the public domain and is therefore likely to attract a non-committal, NCND response.

For example, confirming the use of a policing method which is not in the public domain, may prejudice the use of this method by allowing criminals to adopt countermeasures. If a request asking for the number of times a force has used this tactic is simply exempted, this would actually confirm that such a tactic is used. As such, an NCND response would be more appropriate.

HARM AND THE PUBLIC INTEREST TEST

S31 is a qualified and prejudice-based exemption. This requires the production of evidence of what prejudice may be caused and a full public interest test. (Please refer to the section on harm and the public interest test for more information).

A critical issue is likely to be the timing of the disclosure. Factors favouring disclosure are likely to be weaker while a tactic or methodology is still in current use. However, great care still needs to be taken as it is not uncommon for an outdated tactic to be bought back into use, sometimes many years later, as criminals modify their behaviour.

Information covered by this exemption also tends to attract the most difficult public interest balance test. The public interest in knowing why something was done, particularly if it were badly managed, is a powerful argument. The ICO has outlined his view that cases where justice was not done, either to the accused person or victim, may shift the public interest towards disclosure. This is especially so in cases where procedural failure or mismanagement is the cause.

Each request must be dealt with on a case-by-case basis. There is a need for each piece of information to be assessed. Simply applying a 'blanket' exemption because the information requested would prejudice law enforcement is not valid. The most cost and time effective method of achieving this detailed assessment is to establish exactly what information the applicant really wants, potentially removing the need to analyse each separate piece.

HISTORICAL INFORMATION

This exemption does not apply to information in records that are more than 100 years old.

SECTION 32

INFORMATION CONTAINED IN COURT RECORDS

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information held by a public authority is exempt information if it is held only by virtue of being contained in -
 - (a) any document filed with, or otherwise placed in custody of, a court for the purposes of proceedings in a particular cause or matter,
 - (b) any document served upon, or by, a public authority for the purposes of proceedings in a particular cause or matter, or
 - (c) any document created by
 - (i) a court, or
 - (ii) a member of the administrative staff of a court, for the purposes of proceedings in a particular cause or matter.
- (2) Information is exempt from the duty to communicate where it is held only by virtue of being contained in:
 - (a) any document placed in custody of a person conducting an enquiry or arbitration, for the purposes of the inquiry or arbitration, or
 - (b) any document created by a person conducting an inquiry or arbitration, for the purposes of the inquiry or arbitration
- (3) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise in relation to information which is (or if it were held by the public authority would be) exempt information by virtue of this section.
- (4) In this section -
 - (a) 'court' includes any tribunal or body exercising the judicial power of the State,
 - (b) 'proceedings in a particular cause or matter' includes any inquest or post-mortem examination
 - (c) 'inquiry' means any inquiry or hearing held under any provision contained in, or made under, an enactment, and
 - (d) except in relation to Scotland, 'arbitration' means any arbitration to which Part 1 of the Arbitration Act 1996 applies.

EXEMPTION TYPE: Absolute
Class-based

GUIDANCE

Although large amounts of police information are submitted to the courts, the majority of this information is unlikely to be covered by the s32 exemption.

This is due to the key words used within the legislation which stipulate that information held 'only by virtue' is covered.

Police information is rarely gathered solely for court use as it tends to have multiple functions. In fact, it is unlikely at the information-gathering stage that a definitive knowledge as to the likely final use of the information would be known. For example witness statements are taken as the Police Service has a statutory function to investigate crime and secure evidence. However, at the time statements are taken, the future or end usage of that information is unlikely to be known.

Another example would be a set of financial records which are the subject of litigation. If those records were held for the purposes of that litigation only then they would be covered by s32. However, the reality is that they probably existed because of the authority's obligation to keep financial records in the first place.

In any case, information relating to forthcoming criminal or civil litigation cases is not covered by this exemption. The proceedings in question must have already commenced or have been concluded at the time the request was received for s32 to be engaged.

INFORMATION LIKELY TO BE COVERED

Anything generated by the court itself will attract this exemption in addition to anything produced by the police solely for court use. Discovering the provenance and reasons for the existence of information is key to identifying whether this exemption may be engaged. If in any doubt practitioners should seek advice from the author of the document or the Criminal Justice Departments (or equivalent) who are responsible for the preparation of court papers.

Some of the information likely to attract this exemption includes:

- Warrants
- Court orders
- Court transcripts and records
- Interim court orders
- Bail applications
- Witness summons

HISTORICAL INFORMATION

This exemption is only valid for information less than 30 years old.

This exemption is mainly intended for use by the courts themselves and its use is limited with regard to police information. It is felt that the more police-specific exemptions of s30 and s31 will be more effective in protecting the type of information concerned, especially if there is any doubt as to why it was created. However, it should be borne in mind that this is a powerful absolute, class-based exemption meaning there is no need to evidence prejudice or conduct a public interest test.

SECTION 33

AUDIT FUNCTIONS

LEGISLATION

- (1) This section applies to any public authority which has function in relation to -
 - (a) the audit of the accounts of other public authorities
 - (b) the examination of the economy, efficiency and effectiveness with which other public authorities use their resources in discharging their functions
- (2) Information held by a public authority to which this section applies is exempt information if its disclosure would, or would be likely to, prejudice the exercise of any of the authority's function in relation to any of the matters referred to in subsection (1).
- (3) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise in relation to a public authority to which this section applies if, or to the extent that, compliance with section 1(1)(a) would, or would be likely to prejudice the exercise of any of the authority's functions in relation to any of the matters referred to in subsection (1).

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Prejudice-based

APPLY: Public interest test
Evidence of harm

GUIDANCE

This exemption may be cited by public authorities that have functions relating to either:

- The audit of accounts of other public authorities; or
- To the examination of the economy, efficiency and effectiveness with which other public authorities use their resources in discharging their function.

Importantly, this exemption does not cover information that relates to a local authority's internal audit.

ACPO guidance is that this exemption may be used for information that's intended for future publication where the public interest test has been applied and it is judged that there may be an adverse effect if the information requested is released prematurely.

This exemption is designed to protect organisations with an external audit function - such as the Audit Commission or the Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabularies (HMIC) - where the audit results are, by their very nature, for public consumption.

This exemption does not cover auditing processes that an organisation may exercise on itself, internally.

SECTION 34

DISCLOSURE WHICH WOULD INFRINGE PARLIAMENTARY PRIVILEGE

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt information if exemption from section 1(1)(b) is required for the purpose of avoiding an infringement of the privileges of either House of Parliament.
- (2) The duty to confirm or deny does not apply if, or to the extent that, exemption from section 1(1)(a) is required for the purpose of avoiding an infringement of the privileges of either House of Parliament.

EXEMPTION TYPE: Absolute
Class-based

GUIDANCE

Information is exempt from disclosure if its release would infringe the privileges of either House of Parliament.

The purpose of this exemption is to protect Parliament's power to retain control over disclosure of its own information.

The duty to confirm or deny is excluded under this exemption where confirming or denying the existence of information would infringe the privileges of either House.

Whilst confirmation or denial of the existence of information is less likely to infringe Parliamentary privilege than disclosure itself, s34(2) will apply where confirmation or denial would result in a breach of privilege.

SECTION 35

FORMULATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY AND OTHER GOVERNMENTAL INTERESTS

LEGISLATION

- 1) Information held by a government department or by the National Assembly for Wales is exempt information if it relates to -
 - (a) the formulation or development of government policy
 - (b) Ministerial communications
 - (c) the provision of advice by any of the Law Officers or any request for the provision of such advice, or
 - (d) the operation of any Ministerial private office
- (2) Once a decision as to government policy has been taken, any statistical information used to provide an informed background to the taking of the decision is not to be regarded-
 - (a) for the purposes of subsection (1)(a), as relating to the formulation or development of government policy, or
 - (b) for the purposes of subsection (1)(b), as relating to Ministerial communications.
- (3) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise in relation to information which is (or if it were held by the public authority would be) exempt information by virtue of subsection (1). Duty to confirm or deny does not arise in relation to information that is exempt as defined above.

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Class-based

APPLY: Public interest test

GUIDANCE

This exemption was incorporated into the Act to ensure that policy discussion can be conducted privately. Without this protection, the 'normal' processes of government may be inhibited. Civil servants, for example, may be less candid in their advice to Ministers when considering policy options.

This exemption is reasonably broad in its scope and can be used to cover the formulation or development of government policy even where a policy has been finally adopted.

Limitations on the scope of this exemption have been introduced. For example, once a decision on government policy has been made, background statistical information that provided an informed background in the decision-making process does not fall under this exemption and may therefore be subject to disclosure.

ICO Guidance recommends the disclosure of factual information used to underpin the decision-making process. However, distinguishing between statistics and other forms of fact is more difficult than it may appear. When considering the public interest when differentiating between factual and other information, the Act states:

'regard shall be had to the particular public interest in the disclosure of factual information which has not been used, or is intended to be used, to provide an informed background to decision-taking'.

Whilst this exemption is wide-ranging, it is not all-encompassing and covers only information relating to the 'formulation or development of government policy'. Information that relates to the execution of adopted policies or information concerning other procedural or administrative functions will not fall within the exemption.

This is not an exemption that the Police Service can apply: its use is limited to government departments.

SECTION 36

DISCLOSURE PREJUDICING THE EFFECTIVE CONDUCT OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS

LEGISLATION

- (1) This section applies to -
- (a) information which is held by a government department or by the National Assembly for Wales and is not exempt information by virtue of section 35,
 - (b) information which is held by any other public authority.
- (2) Information to which this section applies is exempt information if, in the reasonable opinion of a qualified person, disclosure of the information under this Act-
- (a) would, or would be likely to, prejudice-
 - (i) the maintenance of the convention of the collective responsibility of Ministers of the Crown, or
 - (ii) the work of the Executive Committee of the Northern Ireland Assembly, or
 - (iii) the work of the Executive Committee of the National Assembly for Wales,
 - (b) would, or would be likely to, inhibit-
 - (i) the free and frank provision of advice, or
 - (ii) the free and frank exchange of views for the purposes of deliberation, or
 - (c) would otherwise prejudice, or would be likely otherwise to prejudice, the effective conduct of public affairs.
- (3) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise in relation to information to which this section applies (or would apply if held by the public authority) if, or to the extent that, in the reasonable opinion of a qualified person, compliance with section 1(1)(a) would, or would be likely to, have any of the effects mentioned in subsection (2).

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Prejudice-based

APPLY: Evidence of harm
Public interest test

GUIDANCE

Information is exempt from disclosure if, in the reasonable opinion of a 'qualified person'*, its disclosure would prejudice, or would be likely to prejudice, certain specified interests relating to public affairs.

Where the information in question is held by either House of Parliament, S36 is an absolute exemption. This exemption may well be applied to stop disclosures that might prejudice the effective conduct of Parliamentary business, even when the principle of Parliamentary Privilege is not threatened.

In other cases, s36 is a qualified exemption. This means the public interest test must be applied.

Where, in all circumstances of the case, the public interest in non-disclosure outweighs the public interest in disclosure, the information need not be disclosed.

S36 differs from other exemptions because it uses the term 'reasonable opinion of a qualified person'. Information to which this section applies is exempt information if, in the reasonable opinion of a 'qualified person', disclosure of the information:

- (b) would, or would be likely to, inhibit
 - (i) the free and frank provision of advice, or
 - (ii) the free and frank exchange of views for the purposes of deliberation, or
- (c) would otherwise prejudice, or would be likely otherwise to prejudice, the effective conduct of public affairs

The main beneficiaries of this exemption will be public authorities. This exemption has been referred to as a 'mopping up' clause in the Act to prevent disclosure of information that's not covered by other specific provisions.

Under this exemption, there is no duty to confirm or deny if, in the opinion of 'reasonable person,' the information is not disclosable.

Assuming a 'qualified person', on reviewing the request for information, believes that the information should be exempt because public interest favours retention, the release of material requested may be declined.

* A specific definition of a 'qualified person' is not included in the Act. Qualified persons are authorised by a Minister of the Crown. For the Police Service, the suitably 'qualified person' is the Chief Constable or Commissioner.

It is ACPO's view that this exemption will have minimal relevance and will only be used by the Police Service in the most exceptional cases.

SECTION 37 COMMUNICATION WITH THE ROYAL FAMILY AND HONOURS

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt information if it relates to -
 - (a) communications with Her Majesty, with other members of the Royal Family or with the Royal Household, or
 - (b) the conferring by the Crown of any honour or dignity
- (2) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise in relation to information which is (or if it were held by the public authority would be) exempt information by virtue of subsection (1).

An amendment to the 2000 Act commenced on 19th January 2011. It states that information relating to communications with the Sovereign, the heir to the Throne or the second in line to the Throne (and communications made or received on their behalf) is subject to an absolute exemption from disclosure, and information relating to communications with other members of the Royal Family (and communications made or received on their behalf) or the Royal Household is subject to a qualified exemption from disclosure (Schedule 7, paragraphs 2 and 3).

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified

Class-based

APPLY: Public interest test

MANDATORY REFERRAL TO CRU

GUIDANCE

This exemption covers letters or other documents received from members of the Royal Family or Royal Household. It will also apply to notes of meetings between officials of a public authority and a member of the royal family or royal household.

ACPO guidance is that all communication falling under this exemption will be actively protected. Where a request is received in relation to the Royal Family and/or any policing issues associated with them, the request must be referred to the Central Referral Unit.

Any response will be approved by the ACPO lead within the Metropolitan Police Service and the keeper of historical records within Buckingham Palace.

SECTION 38

HEALTH & SAFETY

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt information if its disclosure under this Act would, or would be likely to -
- (a) endanger the physical or mental health of any individual, or
 - (b) endanger the safety of any individual
- (2) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if, or to the extent that, compliance with section 1(1)(a) would, or would be likely to, have either of the effects mentioned in subsection (1).

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Prejudice-based

APPLY: Evidence of harm
Public interest test

GUIDANCE

This exemption appears to be of particular relevance to the Police Service. A s38 exemption may be applied where disclosure of information would, or would be likely to endanger:

- The physical or mental health of any individual; or
- The safety of an individual.

It is likely that this definition will cover a wide spectrum of scenarios. By applying this exemption to 'any individual', it may be interpreted as the mental or physical health of a police officer, the requester, another individual or the public in general.

This provision is in line with a similar provision in the Data Protection Act (DPA) that prohibits subject access where there is a risk of 'serious harm'.

This exemption also has the potential to be linked to the provision of confidential and personal information where identification of the source may place that person at risk.

ACPO guidance is that this exemption would be applied vigorously in respect of protecting the identity (and therefore the safety) of informants. This cannot be stated strongly enough.

Other areas that would be protected under s38 are photographs and videos showing post-mortems, injuries, accidents, crime scene videos and similar material that would be likely to affect the mental health of those affected if released into the public domain.

In our consideration, anything requested that is anti-s38 that would have a detrimental effect on mental well-being to the family of those investigated or the public, will be vigorously protected.

SECTION 39

ENVIRONMENTAL INFORMATION

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt information if the public authority holding it-
 - (a) is obliged by regulations under section 74 to make the information available to the public in accordance with the regulations, or
 - (b) would be so obliged for any exemption contained in the regulations.
- (2) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise in relation to information which is (or if it were held by the public authority would be) exempt information by virtue of subsection (1).
- (3) Subsection (1)(a) does not limit the generality of section 21(1)

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Class-based

APPLY: EIR (2004)

GUIDANCE

This exemption aims to ensure that any requests for information are handled under specific regulations implementing the UK's international obligations on access to environmental information rather than under the Act.

Where a request for environmental information is made, it should be considered under the Regulations rather than under the FOI Act.

ACPO suggests mechanisms should be in place to automatically route queries relating to environmental information through the Environmental Information Regulations.

SECTION 40

PERSONAL INFORMATION

LEGISLATION

- (1) Any information to which a request for information relates is exempt information if it constitutes personal data of which the applicant is the data subject.
- (2) Any information to which a request for information relates is also exempt information if-
 - (a) it constitutes personal data which do not fall within subsection (1), and
 - (b) either the first or the second condition below is satisfied.
- (3) The first condition is-
 - (a) in a case where the information falls within any of paragraphs (a) to (d) of the definition of 'data' in section 1(1) of the Data Protection Act 1998, that the disclosure of the information to a member of the public otherwise than under this Act would contravene-
 - (i) any of the data protection principles, or
 - (ii) section 10 of that Act (right to prevent processing likely to cause damage or distress), and
 - (b) in any other case, that the disclosure of the information to a member of the public otherwise than under this Act would contravene any of the data protection principles if the exemptions in section 33A(1) of the Data Protection Act 1998 (which relate to manual data held by public authorities) were disregarded.
- (4) The second condition is that by virtue of any provision of Part IV of the Data Protection Act 1998 the information is exempt from section 7(1)(c) of that Act (data subject's right of access to personal data).
- (5) The duty to confirm or deny-
 - (a) does not arise in relation to information which is (or if it were held by the public authority would be) exempt information by virtue of subsection (1), and (b) does not arise in relation to other information if or to the extent that either-
 - (i) the giving to a member of the public of the confirmation or denial that would have to be given to comply with section 1(1)(a) would (apart from this Act) contravene any of the data protection principles or section 10 of the Data Protection Act 1998 or would do so if the exemptions in section 33A(1) of that Act were disregarded, or
 - (ii) by virtue of any provision of Part IV of the Data Protection Act 1998 the information is exempt from section 7(1)(a) of that Act (data subject's right to be informed whether personal data being processed).
 - (b) does not arise in relation to other information if or to the extent that either—
 - (i) the giving to a member of the public of the confirmation or denial that would have to be given to comply with section 1(1)(a) would (apart from this Act) contravene any of the data protection principles or section 10 of the [1998 c. 29.]

Data Protection Act 1998 or would do so if the exemptions in section 33A(1) of that Act were disregarded, or

- (ii) by virtue of any provision of Part IV of the [1998 c. 29.] Data Protection Act 1998 the information is exempt from section 7(1)(a) of that Act (data subject's right to be informed whether personal data being processed).
- (6) In determining for the purposes of this section whether anything done before 24th October 2007 would contravene any of the data protection principles, the exemptions in Part III of Schedule 8 to the [1998 c. 29.] Data Protection Act 1998 shall be disregarded.
- (7) In this section— "the data protection principles" means the principles set out in Part I of Schedule 1 to the [1998 c. 29.] Data Protection Act 1998, as read subject to Part II of that Schedule and section 27(1) of that Act; "data subject" has the same meaning as in section 1(1) of that Act; "personal data" has the same meaning as in section 1(1) of that Act.

EXEMPTION TYPE: Absolute (in part)
Class-based

APPLY: Public interest test on rare occasions

GUIDANCE

Under the DPA, applicants must clearly state their intention to apply for their own personal information.

This is not the case under FOI: there is no requirement to specify that a request is being made under FOI legislation and it is up to the authority receiving the request to determine the correct path.

The interface between the DPA and FOIA is complex. The FOIA contains some significant amendments to the DPA. In particular, it increases the range of data to which an individual has rights of access under the DPA. It will be necessary, therefore, in certain circumstances when processing FOI requests to step into the DPA.

S40 for the most part is an absolute exemption.

Where a request is made by an applicant requesting their own personal information, this is an absolute exemption under s40(1).

This application becomes a Subject Access Request under the DPA and should be channelled through appropriate procedures to be dealt with by Data Protection Officers and a s40(5) refusal notice issued.

If the request for information relates to third parties (anybody other than the data subject), it is absolute under s40(2) if disclosure would breach any of the data protection principles. Releasing sensitive personal information to someone other than the data subject will almost always infringe the data protection principles contained in the DPA.

Generally speaking, two broad questions will need to be addressed:

1. Is the information 'personal data'?
2. If so, will disclosure breach one of the data protection principles?

Data Protection Principles:

According to the 8 principles, data must be:

- Fairly and lawfully processed;
- Processed for limited purposes;
- Adequate, relevant and not excessive;
- Accurate and up to date;
- Not kept for longer than is necessary;
- Processed in line with your rights;
- Secure; and
- Not transferred to other countries without adequate protection.

It is a requirement when refusing information under this sub-section to articulate to the applicant which of these principles would be breached and why.

Of the above, the first principle is the most relevant to decision making under FOI. Practitioners must always determine whether disclosure is 'fair' to the data subject. There is a requirement to balance the public interest in disclosure against any harm that may be caused to the individual concerned.

'Personal Data' means data that relate to a living individual who can be identified:

- From those data; or
- From those data and other information that is in the possession of, or likely to come into the possession, of the data controller.

This definition also includes the expression of any opinion about the individual or any indication of the intentions of the data controller or any other person in respect of the individual.

'Sensitive Personal Data' means personal data consisting of information that relates to:

- The racial origin of the data subject;
- The political opinions of the data subject;
- The religious beliefs or other beliefs of a similar nature;
- Membership of a Trade Union or similar;
- His or her physical or mental health or condition;
- His or her sexual life;
- The commission or alleged commission by the data subject of any offence; or
- Any proceedings of any offence committed or alleged to have been committed by the data subject, the disposal of such proceedings or the sentence of any court in such proceedings.

Requests for information about third parties are covered by the FOIA but data protection principles apply. This is governed by s40(2). For this type of request, there is a need to consider whether disclosure contravenes the data protection principles and the lawful processing of data.

This exemption falls into 2 parts. Where the release of data would:

- Contravene data protection principles; or
- If the request had been made by the subject of the data, it would be covered by an exemption under the DPA.

Where requests relating to third party information are made and exemptions may not be applied, then the information will be released. However, this will be rare.

S40(2) also contains two alternative exemptions for third party data. However, for practical purposes it is hard to think of a situation when these might be useful, as it is highly likely that the main third party data exemption or other FOIA exemptions will be easier to apply.

S40(5)

Please refer to the NCND chapter when using s40(5).

PROCESSING DATA

Compliance with the terms of FOIA is a statutory obligation. This means that forces may need to process personal data in order to extract the information that has been requested. This would not represent a breach of the Data Protection Act, even though the force is not now processing the data for reasons for which it was originally gathered eg accessing PNC.

SECTION 41

INFORMATION PROVIDED IN CONFIDENCE

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt if -
 - (a) It was obtained by the public authority from any other persons (including another public authority), and
 - (b) The disclosure of the information to the public (otherwise than under this Act) by the public authority holding it would constitute a breach of confidence actionable by that or any other person.
- (2) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if, or to the extent that, the confirmation or denial that would have to be given to comply with section 1(1)(a) would (apart from this Act) constitute an actionable breach of confidence.

EXEMPTION TYPE: Absolute
Class-based

Although not qualified, there is a requirement to conduct a PIT on whether the common law duty of confidentiality can be overcome. This differs from the usual PIT applied under FOI insofar as the default position favours non-disclosure unless overwhelming evidence is provided favouring disclosure.

GUIDANCE

S41 covers information provided in confidence and is likely to have widespread relevance to the Police Service. However, whilst the exemption appears to be both class-based and absolute, its power is reduced because it is defined in 'relation to the equitable action for breach of confidence'.

This means s41 is an absolute exemption - where release of the information would result in an actionable breach of confidence - but it has its own built-in form of testing for ascertaining whether there could be such a breach.

This exemption does not cover information that a public authority has generated internally. It specifically relates to information that has been obtained by the public authority from another person (this may include an individual, a company, a local authority or any other 'legal entity'). The exemption may be enforced only where an actionable breach of confidence would occur should the information be disclosed. This is where release would result in the provider or a third party taking the authority to court.

- Information falling within s41 may also be exempt from disclosure under s40 (Personal information), s43 (Commercial interests) or s30(2) (Confidential sources).

BREACH OF CONFIDENCE TEST

To determine whether a breach of confidence would occur if the information were to be disclosed, the following questions need to be applied:

- Does the information have the necessary quality of confidence about it?
Information that is already in the public domain, or has not been treated as confidential by the originator, does not have the necessary quality of confidence. Where information has been subjected to restricted disclosure - where it is not already available publicly or where the originator of the information has treated it as confidential - the information may still be subject to an obligation of confidence.
- Was the information imparted in circumstances that imply an obligation of confidence?
This refers to whether the 'giver' of the information expresses that the information is confidential in nature when s/he imparts the information to others. At the same time, the recipient of the information must acknowledge that the information received is confidential in nature. In this case, there is an obligation of confidence attached to the information.
- Was there an unauthorised use of that information to the detriment of the person communicating it?
This exemption also applies to information given to a public authority by another body or individual, not information that a public authority itself might consider as confidential. When deciding on whether to release the information or not, there is no obligation to consult third parties but the draft Codes of Practice state that those parties affected by disclosure should be approached.
- The Duty to Confirm or Deny S41(2)
If confirming existence of the information would be likely to be a breach of confidence, then the need to confirm/deny is negated. This applies where information is provided by informants.

Where the legal rights of a third party would be breached - under the DPA, for example - they should be consulted prior to disclosure.

The ACPO view is that information given by informants, whether internal or external, will be exempt under s41, subject to the breach of confidence test although consideration should also be given to the application of s40.

The provision of information to the Police Service by individuals and organisations remains critical to the prevention and detection of crime. Much of this information is supplied as part of routine transactions with victims, witnesses and other persons connected to crimes or other incidents that require police involvement.

In addition, the Police Service actively encourages the community to supply information relating to specific crimes and more general criminal activity through Crimestoppers and the use of informants.

It has been long recognised that the supply of information concerning serious and organised criminal activity to the police has been critical to crime detection and/or disruption. In many cases this information is supplied only as a result of assurances of confidentiality. In the policing context, any breach of confidentiality that leads to the identification of informants or organisations may have serious consequences, including loss of life.

Apart from the serious consequences that arise in any individual case, the disclosure of information relating to confidential sources is likely to reduce the willingness of individuals to supply information to the Police Service and engage with the wider criminal justice system.

CHIS will be actively protected for the life of the informant (and potentially beyond where family issues are relevant).

OFFICIAL GUIDANCE

The law of confidence is a common law concept. To determine whether an obligation of confidence exists in terms of FOI, there is a need to consider:

- The circumstances under which the information was provided to the authority; and
- The nature of the information.

Where explicit conditions of confidence are attached to information, it is clear that a public authority should be cautious in its subsequent use or disclosure. The conditions of confidence may be written, contractual or verbal.

It becomes more difficult to judge whether an obligation of confidence exists when it is not stated explicitly, but is obvious or implied from the circumstances of its transfer. In these cases, it is recommended that the advice of any third party likely to be affected by disclosure should be considered prior to the release of information. Where information is gathered as a result of the statutory requirements or powers conferred upon a public authority, there is a need to carefully consider whether or not the law of confidence would prevent disclosure of information to third parties.

Information that has the necessary quality of confidence about it should be protected by an obligation of confidence. The information itself need not be highly sensitive in nature but it should not be trivial either.

The information in question must not be readily available elsewhere or by other means. It should not be able to be surmised. Equally, the information need not necessarily be secret: a victim of crime, for example, does not lose the right to confidentiality if they disclose details of a crime to a friend.

The courts have identified three general sets of circumstances that may precipitate the disclosure of information:

- Disclosures with consent. Where the person (individual or organisation) to whom the obligation of confidentiality applies consents to the release of the information, this will not lead to an actionable breach of confidence;

- If a disclosure is required by law, it is unlikely the information will be subject to an FOI request in any event; or
- Disclosures where there is a strong public interest in releasing the information requested.

When enforcing this exemption, public authorities must be satisfied that any breach of confidence that would occur from the release of the information would be actionable ie. the aggrieved third party would have the right to take the authority to court.

Thus, a public authority must:

- Be sure that the information in question is confidential;
- Take advice from the people - individuals or organisation - affected but be aware that third parties are not afforded the right of veto and the decision to release or withhold is with the public authority; and
- Be aware that the aggrieved party must have legal standing - one Government department can not, for example, sue another.

The GPMS is a useful preliminary indicator as to the nature of the information. However, documents and information marked 'confidential' are not necessarily automatically exempt from release.

Documents that were originally labelled 'confidential' may no longer be confidential because of the time elapsed. Authorities should consider the introduction of a system that defines and records the period of time during which the marking scheme is anticipated to be relevant.

There is no guarantee that information received from external bodies will have the necessary quality of confidence about it after a period of time. Similar to issues relating to the internal marking scheme, what was confidential at the time of writing may no longer be at the time disclosure is requested. However, prior to disclosure, it is recommended that a public authority consults the information provider and any affected third party, notwithstanding the fact that the ultimate decision will rest with the public authority.

The law of confidence is legally complex. The IC recommends that other exemptions contained within the Act may be more immediately relevant.

This exemption can only be used for externally generated information since a public authority is unable to sue itself.

SECTION 42

LEGAL PROFESSIONAL PRIVILEGE

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information in respect of which a claim to legal professional privilege or, in Scotland, to confidentiality of communications could be maintained in legal proceedings is exempt information.
- (2) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if, or to the extent that, compliance with section 1(1)(a) would involve the disclosure of any information (whether or not already recorded) in respect of which such a claim could be maintained in legal proceedings.

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Class-based

APPLY: Public interest test

GUIDANCE

Under the Act, an applicant may not obtain disclosure of legal advice offered to a public authority by a solicitor in private practice or an in-house lawyer, subject to the application of the public interest test since this is a qualified exemption.

This exemption is class-based. This means there is no requirement to demonstrate any 'prejudice' that may occur to the professional legal adviser/client relationship if information is disclosed. It is inherently implied that the release of information that may appear trivial might undermine the relationship between lawyer and client. However, the public interest test must be applied to determine whether the information should be disclosed or exempted.

By virtue of s63 of the Act, this exemption will no longer apply after a period of 30 years following the year after the record in question was created.

For the Police Service, s30 (Investigations and proceedings conducted by public authorities) or s31 (Law enforcement) may be more easily applied than s42, Legal professional privilege.

Note: Where s42 is being considered or cited, the force's legal services department must be contacted and their views sought.

The client-legal professional privilege is a principal enshrined in history that must be respected.

Advice provided by the CPS is not covered by s42.

SECTION 43

COMMERCIAL INTERESTS

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt information if it constitutes a trade secret.
- (2) Information is exempt information if its disclosure under this Act would, or would be likely to, prejudice commercial interests of any person (including the public authority holding it).
- (3) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if, or to the extent that, compliance with section 1(1)(a) would, or would be likely to, prejudice the interests mentioned in subsection (2).

EXEMPTION TYPE: Qualified
Class-based

APPLY: Public interest test

GUIDANCE

S43 sets out an exemption from the right to know if:

- The information requested is a trade secret. In this case, there is no need to apply the public interest test and consider the harm its release may cause. It may be withheld; or
- The release of the information is likely to prejudice the commercial interests of any person (a 'person' may be an individual, a company, public authority itself or any other legal entity). Where the information requested does not constitute a trade secret, it can only be withheld if the public authority is satisfied a person's commercial interests would be compromised by its release.

S43 does not absolve the authority from the obligation to inform an applicant whether it holds the information that constitutes a trade secret.

However, where the requested information is likely to prejudice commercial interests other than trade secrets, s43 removes the obligation to confirm whether the information is held.

If information is produced or compiled with a view to it being sold on as a commercial product - as with training materials, for example - then this too will fall under the s43 exemption.

Where the information requested is neither commercially sensitive nor commercially valuable or where it has no commercial value to the organisation in any other format, then authorities must consider releasing it, subject to application of the public interest test.

OFFICIAL GUIDANCE

A 'trade secret' is not defined in the FOIA. However, its interpretation can be wide-ranging and may extend to customers and the goods they buy, a company's pricing structure if this is generally not in the public domain and the source of a company's 'competitive advantage'. In keeping with other breaches of confidentiality, the unauthorised disclosure of information may result in legal action being taken against the public authority.

By definition, disclosing a trade secret would prejudice a commercial interest. The public authority must confirm or deny that it holds the information.

The following questions will help a public authority determine whether the information requested constitutes a trade secret:

- Is the information commercially sensitive and does it give a company a 'competitive edge' over its rivals?
- Is it obvious from the nature of the information that its release would cause harm and erode competitive advantage? Has the owner of the information stated this?
- Is the information already published in some form and in the public domain?
- How easy would it be for competitors to discover or reproduce the information for themselves? Generally, the less skill or effort that was required to generate the information, the less likely the information will constitute a trade secret.

The concept of commercial interests is wide and extends to a person's ability to successfully trade in a commercial environment. The underlying motive for commercial activity is profit.

Types of information that may affect commercial interests include:

- Procurement - public authorities will hold a range of information relating to the procurement process and proposed future procurement plans. This may include information held in unsuccessful bids right through to the details of the contract with the successful company. Details may also be held of how a company or product has performed under contract.
- Regulation - public authorities that perform their regulatory functions and potential breaches may hold information that will support this role.
- Public authority's own commercial activities - those public authorities that engage in commercial activities may hold information that will potentially fall within the scope of the exemption.
- Policy development - information that is commercial in nature may be recorded during the formulation or evaluation.
- Policy implementation - public authorities may hold information relating to the assessment of business proposals and the awarding of grants that may be commercially sensitive in nature.

- Private finance initiative/public private partnerships - where the private sector is involved in the financing and delivering of public sector projects and services, the public authority may hold information that is both project-related and more general.

The information listed above is not necessarily exempted from disclosure under FOIA but is subject to the prejudice test and the public interest test prior to disclosure.

The following outline some of the questions that may be asked when reviewing whether the release of information may harm the commercial interests of either the public authority or supplying companies:

- Does the information relate to, or could it impact on commercial activity?
Some information may directly relate to commercial activity whilst other information may have a more indirect link.
- Is the commercial activity conducted in a competitive environment?
The lower the level of competition in any given marketplace, the less likely commercial interests will be prejudiced with the release of information. Where a public authority is the sole purchaser of specialist equipment, for example, the commercial interests of the company could be more dependent on the procurement plans of the public authority rather than the impact of releasing commercial information.
- Would there be damage to reputation or business confidence?
If release were to damage a company's reputation or the confidence of customers, suppliers or investors, the commercial exemption may be applied. The same may be said where release may impact revenue or threaten ability to obtain supplies or secure finance.
- Whose commercial interests are affected?
In some circumstances, it may be unclear as to whose commercial interests may be prejudiced by disclosure of information. For example, if the amount of money set aside by a public authority for procurement is released, the bargaining position of the authority may be compromised if suppliers then increase their prices.
- Is the information commercially sensitive?
Companies compete by offering something different from their rivals. The difference will often be reflected in their price and may also relate to the quality or specification of the product or service they offer. Information identifying this unique element is likely to be commercially sensitive. It may also inadvertently reveal information about profit margins and possibly working practises.
- What is the likelihood of the prejudice being caused?
A judgement will need to be made on the likely prejudice caused by disclosure of certain information. Whilst the prejudice may not be substantial, it does not have to be trivial either. Prejudice should be likely from disclosure or there should be a significant risk, rather than it being a remote possibility.

The public authority must always consider whether the release of information is in the public interest, regardless of whether or not the information forms a trade secret. Authorities must weigh the possible prejudice caused by disclosure against the likely benefit to the applicant and the wider public.

In addition, just because a request for information was declined at one point in time, it does not mean that the public interest is best served if that information is permanently withheld. Market conditions may change and information relating to costs may become out of date quickly.

FOI decision-makers must also remember that there is an overlap between commercial interest and confidentiality. They will determine whether or not disclosure might prejudice commercial interests of a third party, consider the likelihood of a third party being able to successfully take action in the courts for breach of confidence.

CONSULTATION

A public authority may wish to consult parties likely to be affected by the disclosure of commercial information to determine likely prejudice. Discussion with suppliers to identify the types of information that may harm commercial interests if disclosed may be appropriate.

A review of circumstances under which the public authority agrees to consult suppliers in the event of FOI requests is also advisable. However, it is ultimately the responsibility of the public authority to decide whether or not an exemption applies to prevent the release of information.

CONTRACTS/CONFIDENTIALITY CLAUSES

There is an overlap between s43 and s41 which provides that information is exempt where its release could lead to a public authority being taken to court for a breach of confidence.

During the procurement process, suppliers may request of public authorities that they sign confidentiality clauses that attempt to prevent the disclosure of information. However, blanket clauses that are designed to restrict the disclosure of any information, including that which could be disclosed without any prejudice to the commercial interests of the supplier, are not acceptable in the view of the IC. Alternatively, clauses that seek to identify and protect that information that would genuinely prejudice a third party's commercial interests are perfectly acceptable.

In the future, public authorities may be well advised to develop a new approach to confidentiality agreements. They may also wish to review existing contracts and discuss with suppliers and contractors the circumstances under which the information might be released in response to a request for information.

SECTION 44

INFORMATION COVERED BY PROHIBITIONS ON DISCLOSURE

LEGISLATION

- (1) Information is exempt information if its disclosure (otherwise than under this Act) by the public authority holding it -
 - (a) is prohibited by or under any enactment
 - (b) is compatible with any Community obligation, or
 - (c) would constitute punishment as a contempt of court.
- (2) The duty to confirm or deny does not arise if the confirmation or denial that would have to be given to comply with section 1(1)(a) would (apart from this Act) fall within any of paragraphs (a) to (c) of subsection (1).

EXEMPTION TYPE: Absolute
Class-based

GUIDANCE

This exemption is something of a catch-all and states information that may be prohibited from disclosure under other legislation is protected under FOI.

Under this exemption, information is exempt from disclosure if it is prohibited from being released under any other enactment.

Where there is another piece of legislation governing the release of certain categories or types of information, these are sufficient grounds to refuse release under an FOI request.

In effect, s44 allows other pieces of legislation to be imported into the FOI Act under s44(1)(a).

S44(1)(b) prohibits disclosure of information if it is incompatible with or contradictory to any European Union legislation covering release of categories or types of information.

S44(1)(c) facilitates the withholding of any information that would, if released, lead to contempt of court.

If this exemption had not been included in the FOIA, there would be a danger that where there is a requirement for information to be withheld under other legislation, it may have been releasable under FOI, causing a potentially serious conflict without the protection afforded by s44.

PUBLICATION SCHEME

INTRODUCTION

S19 of the Act places a duty on public authorities to adopt, implement, operate and maintain a publication scheme. The publication scheme is an integral part of compliance with the Freedom of Information Act and serves as the ongoing indicator that public authorities are committed to openness and transparency.

A well managed, up-to-date publication scheme will ensure that information is proactively published in accordance with the spirit and intentions of the Act to make information available to the public.

It is important to note that the proactive publishing of information is an organisational responsibility and not solely a matter for FOI Officers. There are wider organisational benefits than those related solely to compliance with the Act. Aside from improved transparency and openness, forces can:

- Manage the content, format and timescales of the publication of information;
- Make wider use of information it already produces for other purposes such as for Police Authority or Home Office use;
- Divert requests for information from the bureaucracy of the FOI process; and
- Enable FOI Officers, when responding to FOI requests, to make greater use of s21 and s22.

LEGISLATIVE REQUIREMENTS

Following its review in 2007/08, the ICO has produced a model publication scheme that can be adopted without modification by any public authority without further approval and will be valid from 1st January 2009 until further notice.

The scheme commits an authority:

- To proactively publish or otherwise make available as a matter of routine, information, including environmental information, which is held by the authority and falls within the classifications.
- To specify the information held by the authority that falls within the classifications.
- To proactively publish or otherwise make available as a matter of routine, information in line with the statements contained within the scheme.
- To produce and publish the methods by which the specific information is made routinely available so that it can be easily identified and accessed by members of the public.
- To review and update on a regular basis the information the authority makes available under this scheme.
- To produce a schedule of any fees charged for access to information which is made available proactively.
- To make this publication scheme available to the public.

The scheme includes:

- Classes of information and a general definition of those classes;
- The method by which information will be made available; and
- Circumstances where charges may be made.

THE ABOVE CONSTITUTES THE LEGAL REQUIREMENTS UNDER s19 OF THE ACT.

The ICO has also provided the following guidance:

- Sector-specific guidance manual, known as the 'Definitions Document'; and
- 'How to Operate a Publication Scheme', which includes the ICO enforcement policy. This guidance does not set out any legal requirements but it does provide good practice and will be used by the ICO as a starting point for assessing whether a public authority has complied with the model publication scheme.

The Central Referral Unit has provided detailed examples of information which must be published on the new publication scheme in order to comply with the Act. The listed information is the minimum standard to which forces are required to adhere.

This document has been drawn up specifically for forces to ensure clarity in what is required to appear within the new publication scheme as a minimum.

Copies are available from the CRU and are also published on POLKA.

DOCUMENTS TO BE VIEWED

In order to implement the new publication scheme, forces may need to refer to ICO guidance:

<http://www.ico.gov.uk/>

GUIDANCE

Forces will have a link to 'Freedom of Information' prominently displayed on the front page of their force web-site. The link will direct the public to the Publication Scheme, which will list the following documents:

- The ICO Model Publication Scheme 2009
- a link to the ICO Website may be provided
- The Police Sector Definitions Document
- a link to the ICO Website may be provided.
- Guide to Published Information
- a detailed section on this document appears below.

GUIDE TO PUBLISHED INFORMATION

- The Guide must be published on the force website.
- Each force is required to produce and publish its own unique copy of this document that is force-specific.

- The ICO has stated that the Guide will specify:
 - The information it will routinely make available (based on the Police Sector Definitions Document and the ACPO Minimum Standards Document)
 - How the information can be accessed; and
 - Whether or not a charge will be made for it.
- Each piece of information must be located on the website or accessible via other means to the general public. This can include hard copy information that may be sent out on request.
- There is no requirement to make a paper copy of the entire contents of the published information available in libraries or other public areas. However, any public contact points, e.g. front desk at police stations, reception staff, switchboard staff, should have sufficient understanding of how to assist the public if they make a request for information, including checking whether the information is already published or available.
- Use of the Guide means that the information does not have to be published in a discrete area of the force web-site. The information can be held on a page relevant to that subject matter, on another web-site or in paper or disc format held by the owning department. However, forces may choose to operate the traditional method of grouping the published information together. If information is not grouped together, the Guide should contain links.
- The model scheme introduces the concept of 'routinely making information available'. It is not necessary to have all the information in full on the force web-site; this can often be impractical due to the size of documents. The Guide will state how the information can be accessed: i.e. a link to the relevant page on the force web-site, a link to another web-site, a contact number for the public to use to ask for a copy of the information to be sent to them, arrangements for coming into force to view the information.
- An example of this document has been posted within the FOIA community on POLKA.

INFORMATION TO BE MADE AVAILABLE

The starting point for ensuring that the required information is made available is the Police Sector Definitions Document, which puts a policing slant on the generic classes of information listed in the model publication scheme.

The contents of this document have been the subject of consultation with a group of regional representatives and it is expected that most forces will hold the majority of the information listed.

The ICO expects authorities to regard the document as a 'minimum requirement' and to provide all the information listed unless it can be legitimately excluded.

Information can be legitimately excluded where:

- It is not held;
- It is exempt from disclosure by virtue of an exemption in the FOI Act; or

- The information is not readily available, e.g. the information has been archived in accordance with records management policy; the information is held in an obsolete format and would require specialist techniques to retrieve it.

ACPO has produced further guidance on the application of the descriptions in the Police Sector Definitions Document. However, it will be up to each force to demonstrate that information has been excluded legitimately.

As well as listing what information is available, your Guide will explain how often the information is updated, whether previous data is still available and for how long, and when data will be archived.

FORMAT OF THE PUBLICATION SCHEME

The manner in which the ICO has devised the model scheme allows for some flexibility in the format. The most important principle is that the information is accessible to the public, regardless of whether they have any knowledge or understanding that the proactive publication of information is a requirement under the Freedom of Information Act.

ACPO advises that forces can select their preferred format for the publication scheme; either a discrete area on the force web-site or links to where the information is held. The Guide to Published Information must be easily accessible. All staff with a role in handling enquiries from the public must be made aware of the Guide and how to access it.

MONITORING AND REVIEW

The model scheme includes a requirement to review the information published under the scheme.

Forces can approach this in one of two ways:

- The FOI Officer is responsible for adding and updating the information as it becomes available.
- The department owning the information is responsible for adding and updating the information, with the FOI Officer conducting a review at least annually to ensure the publication scheme is being maintained.

In either option it is ACPO policy that FOI Officers conduct an annual review of the publication scheme to include how it is operating as well as the information itself. This review should be carried out in conjunction with departments to ensure that best use is being made of the publication scheme and to assess whether new information is being produced that should be made public.

FEES AND CHARGES

The expectation of both the ICO and ACPO is that information will be provided free of charge. A charge can be made in exceptional circumstances and this should be made clear in the Guide to Published Information. Charges can be made for disbursements, e.g. photocopying, postage, or where the authority is legally authorised to charge.

It is ACPO policy that a charge should be made only in exceptional circumstances and where the charge can be fully justified. Information published on the force web-site will not attract a fee (including disbursements) if it is requested in hard copy format. Information that is 'made available' can attract a fee for disbursements where the document is large or where the person requests that it is made available in a particular format, e.g. copied to disk or CD. Forces should refer to the disbursements section of the Fees Regulations.

COMPLAINTS PROCEDURE

The information on your web-site should include details of how to make a complaint about how the force is operating its publication scheme.

In this first instance, such complaints should be directed to the FOI Officer. The FOI Officer will establish whether the complaint is upheld and provide a written response to the complainant within 20 working days. The written response will include details of how to complain to the ICO if the complainant is not satisfied.

GUIDANCE

It is ACPO Policy that requests for information that fall under EIR will be handled in exactly the same way as Freedom of Information requests, with the exception that EIR requests may be received verbally.

The main differences between the FOIA and the EIR may be identified as follows:

- The key difference is that, unlike FOI requests, EIR requests may be received verbally and there is no legislative requirement for them to be written down.
- Under FOIA, the public interest test applies only in the case of qualified exemptions. Under EIR, the public interest test applies to all of the exceptions.
- The duty to confirm or deny applies in all cases under EIR except where there would be an adverse affect on international relations, defence, national security, public safety and confirming or denying would therefore not be in the public interest.
- Under EIR, any disclosure that would adversely affect the rights of an individual not obliged to provide the authority with information would not be entitled to disclose where the individual affected has not consented to disclosure.
- There are additional exceptions under EIR that are not specifically covered under FOIA such as exceptions to disclose in relation to internal communications and exceptions on disclosure where release would adversely affect intellectual property rights or the protection of the environment. Under EIR, there are no exceptions that link the release of information with a prejudicial impact on the economic interests of the UK or part of the UK
- Under EIR, the applicant has 40 working days to appeal any decision made by the authority and the authority must respond to any complaint within 40 working days.

LIST OF EIR EXCEPTIONS

FOI LEGISLATION

ACCESS TO INFORMATION HELD BY PUBLIC AUTHORITIES

Right to information

1 General right of access to information held by public authorities

(1) Any person making a request for information to a public authority is entitled—

(a) to be informed in writing by the public authority whether it holds information of the description specified in the request, and

(b) if that is the case, to have that information communicated to him.

(2) Subsection (1) has effect subject to the following provisions of this section and to the provisions of sections 2, 9, 12 and 14.

(3) Where a public authority—

(a) reasonably requires further information in order to identify and locate the information requested, and

(b) has informed the applicant of that requirement, the authority is not obliged to comply with subsection (1) unless it is supplied with that further information.

(4) The information—

(a) in respect of which the applicant is to be informed under subsection (1)(a), or

(b) which is to be communicated under subsection (1)(b),

is the information in question held at the time when the request is received, except that account may be taken of any amendment or deletion made between that time and the time when the information is to be communicated under subsection (1)(b), being an amendment or deletion that would have been made regardless of the receipt of the request.

(5) A public authority is to be taken to have complied with subsection (1)(a) in relation to any information if it has communicated the information to the applicant in accordance with subsection (1)(b).

(6) In this Act, the duty of a public authority to comply with subsection (1)(a) is referred to as “the duty to confirm or deny”.

2 Effect of the exemptions in Part II

(1) Where any provision of Part II states that the duty to confirm or deny does not arise in relation to any information, the effect of the provision is that where either—

(a) the provision confers absolute exemption, or

(b) in all the circumstances of the case, the public interest in maintaining the exclusion of the duty to confirm or deny outweighs the public interest in disclosing whether the public authority holds the information, section 1(1)(a) does not apply.

(2) In respect of any information which is exempt information by virtue of any provision of Part II, section 1(1)(b) does not apply if or to the extent that—

(a) the information is exempt information by virtue of a provision conferring absolute exemption, or

(b) in all the circumstances of the case, the public interest in maintaining the exemption outweighs the public interest in disclosing the information.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the following provisions of Part II (and no others) are to be regarded as conferring absolute exemption—

(a) section 21,

(b) section 23,

(c) section 32,

(5) The Secretary of State may by order amend Schedule 1 by removing from Part VI or VII of that Schedule an entry relating to any body or office—

(a) which has ceased to exist, or

(b) as respects which either the first or the second condition above has ceased to be satisfied.

(5) Subsection (3) does not apply where provision is made by or under any enactment as to the fee that may be charged by the public authority for the disclosure of the information.

10 Time for compliance with request

(1) Subject to subsections (2) and (3), a public authority must comply with section 1(1) promptly and in any event not later than the twentieth working day following the date of receipt.

(2) Where the authority has given a fees notice to the applicant and the fee is paid in accordance with section 9(2), the working days in the period beginning with the day on which the fees notice is given to the applicant and ending with the day on which the fee is received by the authority are to be disregarded in calculating for the purposes of subsection (1) the twentieth working day following the date of receipt.

(3) If, and to the extent that—

(a) section 1(1)(a) would not apply if the condition in section 2(1)(b) were satisfied, or

(b) section 1(1)(b) would not apply if the condition in section 2(2)(b) were satisfied, the public authority need not comply with section 1(1)(a) or (b) until such time as is reasonable in the circumstances; but this subsection does not affect the time by which any notice under section 17(1) must be given.

(4) The Secretary of State may by regulations provide that subsections (1) and (2) are to have effect as if any reference to the twentieth working day following the date of receipt were a reference to such other day, not later than the sixtieth working day following the date of receipt, as may be specified in, or determined in accordance with, the regulations.

(3) If on an appeal under subsection (1) relating to a certificate under section 24(3), the Tribunal finds that, applying the principles applied by the court on an application for judicial review, the Minister did not have reasonable grounds for issuing the certificate, the Tribunal may allow the appeal and quash the certificate.

(4) Where in any proceedings under this Act it is claimed by a public authority that a certificate under section 24(3) which identifies the information to which it applies by means of a general description applies to particular information, any other party to the proceedings may appeal to the Tribunal on the ground that the certificate does not apply to the information in question and, subject to any determination under subsection (5), the certificate shall be conclusively presumed so to apply.

(5) On any appeal under subsection (4), the Tribunal may determine that the certificate does not so apply.
